Haiti's duplicitous relationship with the devil

BY JAMES W. BREEDLOVE

As the headlines on Haiti's monstrous earthquake and subsequent recovery efforts begin to fade controversy still remains over the validity of the curse that, according to Pat Robertson, resulted from the Haitian slaves making a pact with the devil in 1791 to obtain their freedom from their French overseers.

While the main stream media has covered the emotional comments of both supporters and detractors of Pat Robertson's curse theory very little factual information has been provided regarding the negative impact on Haiti over the years by America's duplicitous foreign policy. Tim Matthewson's A Pro-Slavery Foreign Policy, Henry Louis Gates The Curse on Haiti, and Noam Chomsky's Year 501 provide excellent background information.

In the emotional debate there is an ambiva-

Sheerin also has published in several exhibition catalogs and written online exhibition reviews. She is pursuing her doctorate at UT Dallas in the Aesthetic Studies program.

"We are delighted to have Kate Sheerin at Centraltrak."

said Dennis Kratz, dean of the School of Arts and Humanities. "She brings an ideal combination of knowledge and experience to build on our previous success, and brings the artist residency program to an even higher level of excellence and impact."

Sheerin said her main goals for Centraltrak include strengthening the residency's ties in the local community and extending support for the program outside the local community. "I would like to see greater participation by visiting artists in the programming of the residency gallery, and hope to bring in artists from vibrant countries that we have not tapped so far, such as Brazil, Cuba, China and India."

Upcoming events at Centraltrak include the Transitive Pairings: Body Object exhibit, running Feb. 13-April 24, and the Urban Sprawl Symposium on Feb. 20.

Aid is power. Who do you want to empower?

BY YIFAT SUSSKIND

In the immediate aftermath of the catastrophe earthquake in Haiti, the first question everyone asked was: How can I help? Many people believe that donating to a large relief agency is the best way to help Haiti. In fact, those agencies do have a critical role to play, though, the problem is that most big relief operations are designed to swoop into a crisis, deliver services and leave.

After the big agencies leave, local people are no more knowledgeable, selfreliant or resilient than they were before. Therefore, it is crucial to help people respond to the next disaster and move toward real development.

One of ways that you can help is to support organizations that reinforce the activities of existing community groups. Too often, big international agencies temporarily set up shop and inadvertently undermine local organizations by attracting their best staff, driving up rents and ultimately weakening the very organizations that communities need for long-term recovery.

It is important to help organizations that understand the role that women play in disasters. Usually, women are described as passive victims. In reality, they are the primary caregivers of those who are most at-risk in a disaster. Women supply the basic needs of children, the sick, the disabled and others in their care.

Also, support relief efforts that involve people who are impacted by the crisis. The "victims" may not have the resources to address the disaster, but they know first-hand what they need to recover and rebuild. Relief operations that allow local people to play leadership roles, set priorities and make decisions are the ones that leave skills and resources in the hands of the communi-

It is crucial to help organizations that talk about root causes of vulnerability in a crisis. Haiti's earthquake was a natural disaster but there is nothing natural about families living in shacks without disaster plans or government services. Understanding what makes people vulnerable is the first step to recovery and building resiliency.

Finding organizations with a history of work in the country is a smart choice. Having local roots, speaking the language and being culturally sensitive go a long way towards getting things done in a crisis.

People should also support organizations that will stay in the country after the news teams and big agencies leave. Long-term projects will keep people planning for the future, helping to ensure that aid is delivered in a way that builds lasting solutions.

Helping organizations that are funded largely by people like you is also critical. Government-supported agencies are often beholden to government policy, not accountable to their members or, more importantly, to the communities where they work. Haiti needs relief efforts that are going to strengthen Haiti itself, not efforts that pride themselves on funneling most of their money back to U.S. corporations.

It's also essential to support small organizations. A large-scale crisis seems to require a large-scale response. However, many big aid operations are bureaucratic, slow and inefficient. Often, the best response to tremendous, urgent need is to replicate successful smallscale models of aid delivery rather than try to get a giant operation moving quickly.

Choosing organizations with a human rights perspective is crucial. Organizations that view Haitians as rightsholders, not victims, will be more effective at supporting Haitians as they strive to rebuild a society based on human rights for all.

Finally, support organizations that you want to see strengthened. Donating to an organization means boosting the capacity of the organiza-

Whenever you have the opportunity to help someone, remember, aid is power. So the next time you give, ask yourself: who do you want to empower?

United State Senate has false fear of filibuster

BY GARY L. FLOWERS

(NNPA) In his State of the Union Address President Barack Obama opened with light-hearted recognition of recent Democratic political losses in Massachusetts, New Jersey and Virginia.

The policy significance of the United States Senate race in Massachusetts was that the perceived balance of power in the Upper Chamber of Congress was in jeopardy. Why? Unlike the United States House of Representatives which functions on a simple majority vote of the 435 members, the U.S. Senate operates on a completely different-and un-democraticset of rules.

For example, in the House bills are introduced and voted on by committees. If a bill is voted out of committee to the House floor, all members vote it upon with a simple majority vote. However, the down side of democracy in the House is that the majority party (Speaker of the House) can shut down how much of a role the minority party may play. In the Senate one Senator can halt the course of a particular bill under current rules.

In addition, there are no time limits on how long a Senator can speak on an issue, which opens the door for an even larger issue. Paradoxically, the most democratic and un-democratic practice of the Senate is the use of a filibuster.

A filibuster is a procedural tool used by legislators to slow down the passage of legislation or the confirmation of a nominee to a high position. Under a filibuster, a Senator may speak indefinitely until the other political party withdraws the bill or person nominated

In its most negative sense, the 1940's, 1950's, and 1960's saw racist southern-and northern-Senators filibuster civil rights legislation aimed at securing the right to vote and the use of public accommodations by people of color. In most cases, a legislator would read long books or even the comic section of papers until the other side relented.

In order to diminish the impact of the filibuster in the U. S. Senate a "super majority" rule was adopted to require 60 (of 100) votes to block a filibuster. Problem is: in order to countervail the un-democratic nature of frivolous filibuster the Senate engages in "fuzzy math" that erroneously permits politicians to think that 41 votes (thus, 59 votes on the other side) constitutes a majority. Not true. I would like to see the majority party "call the hand" of the minority party when the filibuster is threat-

If the Republican Party currently wishes to filibuster health care reform by talking incessantly on the Senate floor, then let them do so. The American people would not look kindly on politicians puffing hot air while people die while being denied access and affordability to health care. My message to the United States Senate: Fear not the filibuster. Call the opposition's bluff and let the voters decide what issues and Senators to support.

Does the government get it about vitamin D?

(NDG Wire) What if there was one pill you could take to help reduce your risk for 17 types of cancer, heart disease, multiple sclerosis, osteoporosis and childhood asthma – and it wasn't a prescription drug? Recent studies indicate this pill could lower breast cancer incidence by as much as 50 percent and reduce the cost of cancer treatment by $25 billion annually, while costing only pennies a day.

That pill exists, according to Dr. Soram Khalsa, a member of the medical staff at Cedars Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. It's vitamin D, and new data suggests it could help stem the tide of many chronic conditions.

Khalsa is a board-certified internist, 30-year practitioner and pioneer of integrative medicine and author of the book The Vitamin D Revolution (www.vitamindrevolution.com).

(NDG Wire) Double-Dave's Pizzaworks in Denton will host a second fundraising event Tuesday, Feb. 9, for Texas Woman's University's Alternative Spring Break program, which allows to students perform volunteer work during spring break. Money raised will go toward helping TWU students complete various community service projects in the Albuquerque, N.M., in March.

Ten percent of all sales between 5 p.m. and 9 p.m. will be given to the program. That includes dine-in, carry out and delivery orders. To place a carryout or delivery order, please call DoubleDave's at 243-DAVE (3283) or go to www.doubledaves.com.

TWU Alternative Spring Break event Feb. 9

The restaurant is located at 220 W. University Drive, just minutes from the TWU campus. DoubleDave's supports many of TWU and the University of North Texas' charitable efforts each year.

"Turn out was less than we would have liked for the Jan. 26 event, but we are committed to supporting the TWU Alternative Spring Break program because it does good work for others," said Ali Kohandani, one of the franchise restaurant's owners.

Each year, TWU facilitates an alternative spring break experience for students and this will be the tenth trip. 16 students and two staff advisers will travel to Albuquerque to volunteer time and perform tasks that address poverty, hunger and women's issues.

"We will learn more about the Native American population in Albuquerque and its culture," said Erin Lansmon-Winter, volunteer coordinator at TWU's Center for Student Development. "We will travel by van and the students will be staying in a local hotel and preparing their own meals."

He said the lack of vitamin D in Americans has been cited as a factor in just about every major ailment, and he is on a crusade to stop the trend.

Khalsa believes the U.S. recommended daily allowance (RDA) of vitamin D is outdated and too low, based on the long standing premise that vitamin D only helps fight rickets.

"In the past 10 years, medical science has discovered that vitamin D in higher doses can help prevent numerous other illnesses, yet the RDA does not reflect that new understanding. Simply put, the government is behind the curve," said Khalsa.

Most organs in the body have vitamin D receptors, and it circulates throughout the body and interacts with cells, tissue and organs, said Khalsa. Vitamin D is really a hormone, not a vitamin, and researchers have found that it interacts with more than 2,000 genes

"Vitamin D is the only substance of its kind in the body," Khalsa said.

The world's best vitamin D researchers are convinced that as many as one billion people worldwide are vitamin D deficient, Khalsa added. "Vitamin D deficiency has been implicated in conditions including cancer, coronary artery disease and even chronic pain. ... The bottom line is that dozens of scientific studies have proclaimed resoundingly that the incidence of these illnesses is lower in people with higher levels of vitamin D in their systems, and is higher in those who lack it. It's just that simple," said Khalsa.

The best way to find out if you are vitamin D deficient is through a simple blood test from your physician or a home test kit. Khalsa said some symptoms of vitamin D deficiency can include:

Muscular weakness

- Feeling of heaviness in
- Chronic musculoskeletal pain
  - Fatigue
  - Frequent infections
  - Depression

In 2002, the Journal of the American Medical Association urged adults to take a daily multivitamin. With the same urgency, Khalsa said he would like to see every adult taking 1000 IU – 2000 IU per day of vitamin D as part of their wellness regimen

He also said lack of access to basic health care increases risk for an array of illnessess.

"By adopting an integrative model of health care that incorporates safe and accepted self-care and complementary medicine strategies, like adding vitamin D, consumers can actively participate in managing their health – proactively mitigating certain risks and improving the quality of their daily lives."

What would you sit in for?

BY JULIANNE MALVEAUX NNPA COLUMNIST

(NNPA) - It has been 50 years since four young North Carolina A&T State University students sat in at a segregated Woolworth's lunch counter for a cup of coffee, 50 years since their action triggered a movement that challenged, and ultimately changed a nation. While a gala and concert were snowed out, thousands will line the streets of Greensboro to celebrate the museum's opening.

The International Civil Rights Museum is an absorbing exploration of our nation's past. There are poll tax receipts, photos of some of those arrested, and the actual lunch counter where the four young men -Ezell A. Blair (now known as Jibreel Khazan), Joseph Mc-Neil, David Richmond and Franklin McCain - sat down on February 1, 1960. There are also photographs - of Emmitt Till in his casket, of lynching, of segregated classrooms, of slaves working. A visit to the museum is a reminder of how far our nation has come in fifty years, but also a reminder of how much more work we have to do before we reach the goal of social and economic justice.

These times, they are a'changing. The signs no longer say "white" or colored. The question is not whether one rides at the back of the bus, but whether one has bus fair, can own a bus company or zone one, or decide whether bus parts should be manufactured domestically or imported. There are no segregated lunch counters anymore, but don't sit down if you can't afford that cup of coffee. In some neighborhoods, there are no segregated lunch counters; there aren't even grocery stores. It is not clear that the tactics of the sit-in movement would bring affordable and healthy food to the 'hood, where often fresh fruit is scarcer than antiquarian bookstores.

In honor of the A&T Four, each of us must ask a question of ourselves. What would you sit in for?

What would make you juggle the many emotions that the A&T Four experienced – audacity, anger, fear, trepidation, anticipation, and righteousness – and choose to make a stand? Would you sit in for the environment? To stop the spread of AIDS? To increase wages?

To stop foreclosures? What would make you risk everything to make a point, to take a stand? Or has complacence so invaded our consciousness that there is nothing that would make us want to sit in?

In his State of the Union address, President Barack Obama placed priority emphasis on job creation. It is one of the most pressing concerns in our nation, with more than 15 million people out of work, half of them for more than half a year. He can't do anything about employment, though, without action from the Congress. The House seems willing, but the Senate is dragging, with some of them suggesting that a balanced budget is far more important than job creation.

They ought to ask the people who aren't working how they feel about that!

How many of the unemployed would be willing to stand or sit outside the Senate until those august representatives take action on job creation. President Obama has asked that $30 billion be set aside for job creation initiatives, but the Senate is balking.

Wouldn't it be a powerful statement if unemployed people were willing to flood the streets of Washington, DC, even in winter cold, demanding that the Congress take action on jobs? This is the kind of action that Dr. Martin Luther King contemplated when he conceived of the Poor People's campaign, the kind of action that outraged Americans were once capable of.

What did we sit in for now? If you need to have your fire for justice rekindled, a good place to start is with a visit to the International Civil Rights Museum in Greensboro.

the school's most popular clubs - Model UN - and the opportunity to debate hot topics such as nuclear proliferation, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, naval build up in Southeast Asia, global sustainability, and the issue of Tibet in China. The students don't just get to voice their own opinions though. Part of their role as acting as a diplomat means researching the country they represent and voting in its best interest. The growing club has competed in multiple regional conferences and recently took their first ever international trip to participate in The Hague International Model United Nations (THIMUN) Singapore conference.

North Hills was one of only two high schools from the United States to take part in the THIMUN Singapore conference. THIMUN conferences are widely regarded as the premier Model UN conferences. with Singapore being the sister-conference of the original Netherlands conference. Thirteen of North Hills' most experienced high school students were selected to travel to the fiveday conference in November, along with Model UN advisor Charles Ryder and the school's Senior Director Cheryl Huisman.

"We have gone to conferences in Denton and Oklahoma several years and were looking to broaden our experience," said Model UN president and senior Jingshen Zhao. "We looked at college conferences at Georgetown, Penn, Harvard, Stanford and UT, as well as the Hague and Singapore THIMUN conferences. One of the things we liked about THIMUN Singapore is that if your work is good and other nations accept your work, it is reported in a book that goes to the actual UN."

At THIMUN Singapore, North Hills students were assigned to represent the small Southeast Asian island nation of Brunei Darussalam in five committees of the General Assembly and also participated in a special Youth Assembly and attempted to create youth-doable solutions to current global problems. Senior Meyappan Subbaiah had the opportunity to act as the Ambassador of Brunei and present a speech about the country to the full 600person General Assembly.

"Model UN has been an excellent opportunity build public speaking skills and has also influence my college goals," said Subbaiah. "I'm looking at studying nuclear engineering, and Model UN has influenced my decision to incorporate that with an international relations aspect. I've applied to Berkley, Purdue, MIT, Penn State, and Texas A&M because they would allow me to pursue this as a double major."

With the Singapore conference now behind them, the group has set their sights on their own upcoming conference, the Dallas Area Model UN (DAMUN) conference, which they are hosting at North Hills on January 30. The high school students from North Hills will be acting as conference hosts and moderators and completely in charge of making sure things run smoothly, being familiar with the conference topics and maintaining parliamentary procedure. Close to a dozen schools have signed up to participate, including North Hills Middle School, Hockaday, St. Marks, Texas Academy of Mathematics and Science, Lovejoy, RL Turner and Berkner. The conference will help raise money for merit-based scholarships for future trips by the North Hills Model UN club.

DAMUN one of five registered conferences of United Nations Dept. of Economic and Social Affairs Non-Governmental Organizations Branch.

North Hills students' goal is to make direct connections with the UN secretariat to make direct diplomatic lobbying from the youth, like the THIMUN conferences – a powerful step that makes every participant a winner. They're also hoping to get invited to the original THIMUN conference in The Hague next

"Since North Hills is part of the Uplift Education family of schools, we're really hoping that the success of Model UN here will spread to the other campuses," said Zhao. "It's an amazing opportunity for any student to learn how to make policy work and influence the world on a macro scale."

The McKinney Housing Authority receive recognition from HUD

(NDG Wire) Recently the U.S. Housing and Urban Development Secretary Shaun Donovan recognized the HUD partners who worked together over the past two years to successfully complete the Katrina-Rita Disaster Housing Assistance Program (DHAP), a rental assistance and case management program that helped 37,000 families who were displaced by the 2005 Gulf Coast hurricanes find a permanent housing solu-

Representative from nearly 20 housing authorities, including the McKinney Housing Authority, a Louisiana non-profit organization, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and HUD Headquarters and field office staffs joined Donovan in Washington to celebrate DHAP's conclusion hurricanes and were not previously HUD assisted.

The program was scheduled to end in February 2009. When Donovan became HUD Secretary in January, he and Department of Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano announced a sixmonth transition program to ensure families had an opportunity to move on to self-sufficiency or to obtain a rental assistance voucher that allows them to rent housing from private landlords. The program ended October 31, 2009 after assisting 37,000 families. Approximately 12,000 of those families obtained a HUD Housing Choice Voucher.

Federal Judge approves new voting districts

(NDG Wire) A new system for conducting Irving City Council elections has been approved by a U.S. district judge. To ensure elections accurately reflect Irving's growth and demographics, the city's voting districts and at-large voting system have changed and will affect the way residents vote when they go to the polls for early voting on April 26 for the May 8 election.

Irving's at-large voting system, which is open for residents to vote for all candidates, has been divided into six single-member voting districts. Only residents living within a specified district's boundaries will be able to vote for candidates who run for a seat in his/her respective district.

Single-member districts include Places 1, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. Two city council seats, Places 2 and 8, as well as the mayor's seat, will remain atlarge, meaning any Irving resident may vote for the position.

The changes follow an ongoing exchange between city leaders and federal court. City representatives have been in communication and full cooperation with the federal court to ensure that the district redesign is in compliance with the Voting Rights Act.

This year, council seats for Places 1, 2 and 7 are up for election. Places 1 and 7 are single-member districts and Place 2 remains at-large. Interested Irving residents may pick up a filing packet at the City Secretary's Office on the fourth floor at City Hall, 825 W. Irving Blvd. For questions about the election process, call the City Secretary's Office at 972-721-2493.

sentatives, District 100, in 1996, and re-elected to the same position in 1998, 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006 and 2008, has agreed to resign her office and never seek or hold future public office.

Hodge entered her guilty plea this morning, before U.S. District Judge Barbara M.G. Lynn, to fraud and false statements on an income tax return.

She faces a maximum statutory sentence of three years in prison, a $100,000 fine, and restitution to the IRS. At the hearing, Judge Lynn indicated that she would be setting the sentencing date as expeditiously as possible.

According to the factual resume filed in the case, over the course of her tenure as a state representative, Hodge supported Southwest Housing Development Company, Inc. (SWH) developments which, among others, included affordable housing developments in District 100.

Co-defendant Cheryl L. Potashnik, the wife of co-defendant Brian L. Potashnik, a real estate developer and the founder, president and a principal of SWH, served in multiple roles in management and development of SWH, including that of chief operating officer and principal of SHW. Cheryl Potashnik pleaded guilty to bribery in connection with benefits given to Hodge by the Potashniks

and SWH

Brian Potashnik also pleaded guilty to bribery of various public officials. Both Potashniks are awaiting sentencing.

According to the factual resume filed, sometime on or before February 27, 2002, Hodge asked Brian Potashnik for assistance in the form of affordable housing for herself within the geographical boundaries of her political district. She indicated that she had financial problems and could not afford to pay the full rate for housing.

Beginning in April 2002, the Potashniks made arrangements to provide Hodge with housing in one of SWH's market-rate affordable housing development units, which was located at Rosemont at Arlington Park in District 100.

Hodge moved into the apartment on April 1, 2002, and renewed her lease, at the same rental rate of $200 per month, in November 2002 and again in March 2003. As reflected in the executed lease agreements, the market rate for this unit was $899 per month, and the difference in rent was paid by the Potashniks.

In addition, the Potashniks paid the utility bills on the apartment from their development funds and provided new carpeting for her house located on Abrams Road in Dallas. The carpeting cost $1,995 and was paid for by the construction arm of SWH, a company named Affordable Housing Construction, Inc.

The total value of the rental subsidies, utilities and carpeting provided to Hodge by the Potashniks from 2002 through 2005 was $32,541. None of this amount was included as income on the corresponding federal income tax returns for the tax years in which it was received by Hodge.

The plea documents further state that Hodge had additional income, in tax years 2001 through 2005, totaling $41,465, comprised, in part, of campaign contributions which she used for her own personal benefit and which she did not include as income on the corresponding federal income tax returns for the tax years in which she received it.

Hodge admits that she filed a U.S. Individual Income Tax Return, Form 1040, with the IRS, that she knew omitted income of $6,914 in 2001; $27,062 in 2002; $13,402 in 2003; $19,908 in 2004; and $6,720 in 2005.

Hodge further admits that as a result, she owes the following in taxes (excluding penalties and interest) to the IRS: $1,937 for 2001; $1,496 for 2002; $1,908 for 2003, $3,887 for 2004, and $1,680 for tax year 2005, for a grand total of $10,908.

18th Annual Trumpet Awards sure to stir emotions

BY IVY N. CARTER NDG STAFF WRITER

The 2010 Trumpet Awards Red Carpet Roll-Out featured many top notch celebrities, politicians, news anchors, community leaders and other prominent African Americans. The red carpet was aligned with media outlets from across the country. The North Dallas Gazette waited patiently for the high fashion, high profile inductees, honorees and guests to enter into the Cobb Energy Performing Arts Centre in Atlanta, Georgia.

Among the first attendees to arrive were members of the United States Congress, television and circuit judges, news personality, professional athletes, and many more. During their walk down the starstudded red carpet they happily addressed the shouts from the media for comments and photo opportunities. The media correspondents, me included, began to cheer as the crème de la crème of 2010 Trumpet Awards ceremony and entertainment entered into the Performing Arts Centre.

The evening hosts and hostess Roland Martin of TVOne's Washington Watch and CNN, actress and actor LisaRaye and Malcolm

Trumpet Awards co-hosts LisaRaye and Malcolm Jamal Warner

Jamal Warner strolled hurriedly down the aisle in order to get into position for the pre-recorded awards ceremony. Martin offered his elation for Frankie Beverly and Maze receiving their very first award.

"The Trumpet Awards is about us and is giving Frankie Beverly and Maze their first ever industry award and it will be televised. That's what this is all about, giving back to those who go unnoticed but work hard for others." Lifetime Achievement Awards recipient Frankie Beverly and Maze, R&B Band, silently slipped past the crowd, dressed in all black - contrary to Frankie Beverly's signature all white attire and Kangoo hat.

Steve Harvey, radio personality, comedian, actor and New York Times best-selling author, Steve Harvey escorted his lovely wife down the red carpet as he attempted to speak to every media outlet possible. He expressed his profound excitement on receiving such a high honor in the African American community, the Pinnacle Award.

"I tell jokes and here I am receiving an award for being an outstanding leader in the community. I couldn't be more honored," said Harvey. "I hope I don't get choked up like I did at the BET Celebration of Gospel," he jokes, "Oh man, I was torn up at that show."

The highlight of the Red Carpet Roll-Out was the arrival of the Trumpet Awards founder and former secretary of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Xernona Clayton, arrived with her husband. Her small frame could not be more deceptive as this 79 year-old civil rights movement coordinator always gives more than her all to locate and honor everyday African Americans around the world.

"This feeling is indescribable," Mrs. Clayton tells the NDG.

"I hope people are touched and inspired by the lives of the honorees and inductees," Clayton says before she is escorted to her Inside the performance hall awaits a soul stirring, soul searching and rocked to the core feeling as we are ushered in to watch the recording of the 18th Annual Trumpet Awards. The consensus of many of the attendees, honorees and inductees was the privilege they felt to be at an event which honored normal, although highly achieved and recognized in their communities, African-Americans.

The performers engaged the crowd with soul-stirring, upbeat or and even solemn musical performances. Of the performers Rachelle Farrell's tribute to military honoree, General William E. Ward left the crowd on their feet. R&B group sensation, After 7 rocked the crowd with classics and Kevon Edmonds, of the group and an accomplished solo artist debuted one of his upcoming singles. Jazz Pianist Chizuko Yoshihiro played a tribute selection for entertainers, performers and other deceased African-Americans. Also included in the tribute performance was a choreographed performance for the late Michael Jackson. Other crowd pleasing performances of the night include R&B artist K'Jon; Jazz saxophonist Kirk Whalum; and many more.

The 2010 Trumpet Awards presenters included Rocky Carroll of NCIS; comedian Cedric the Entertainer; Chef G. Garvin; Honorable Judge Penny Brown Reynolds of syndicated court television show Family Court; the Honorable Judge Glenda Hackett; actress Tasha Smith; Tyler Perry's House of Pain costar Keisha Knight-Pullam; professional athlete Brian O. Jordan; and many more celebrities.

The night continued on and as each recipient received their coveted award emotions began to stir. Some of the emotional acceptance speeches included Dr. Farrah Gray who received the Young Entrepreneur Award. Dr. Gray quoted Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. "If you are not at the table, you are one the menu." He is one of the country's youngest millionaires making his first million by the age of 14 from a star Black General. In his emotional speech he thanked God for being born in such a great nation such as the United States. In closing his acceptance speech he added,

"I only hope there will be a time where the military achievements of African-Americans will not continue to be one at a time but rather a more common happening."

The most emotional testimony came from honoree and Lifetime Achievement Award recipient, Frankie Beverly of the iconic R&B band Frankie Beverly and Maze. He received a soul stirring musical tribute of a Maze classic, Thank You, from gospel legends the Clark Sisters and gospel greats, J. Moss and Kierra "Keke" Sheard.

As Beverly accepted his award, he began to get choked up, "I never thought syrup recipe he received from his grandmother.

Dr. Gray was accompanied by his mother, who doctors told would be a paraplegic after discovering a tumor pressing against her spinal cord. "MD got confused with GOD and my mother is here with me tonight, walking," Dr. Gray said.

General William E. Ward, a decorated military officer, won the Military Service Award is the only 4it would be like this but this goes to show you that if you just wait on the Lord...just wait on the Lord he will make it all happen."

The entire experience was magical and it was an honor for the NDG to be in attendance to the various events preceding the 2010 Trumpet Awards in Atlanta, GA. The official airing of the 2010 Trumpet Awards will air on TVOne, check your local listings for the date and time.

DCCCD's African American Read-In 2010

(NDG Wire) Sometimes writers listen to beat of a different drum. They tell stories, visit foreign lands (and even outer space) through their words, or they share history, people's achievements and reminders that explain how the past affects the future.

Those journeys - history, art, literature and dreams - are part of the legacy of the Dallas County Community College District's 2010 African American Read-In. During the two-hour program on Sat., Feb. 6, printed words come to life as readers and performers share the works of African American authors with young and old alike. The free event, which is scheduled from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Majestic Theatre in downtown Dallas, takes the audience on a journey that stresses the importance of literacy and reading.

Featured presenter Cora Coleman-Dunham hears the beat of that drum...literally. The author of G.A.G.U. is a renowned percussionist as well; she is a former drummer for international pop artist Prince and has worked with Pink, Lalah Hathaway, Richard Smallwood and others. While she has produced her own two-disc HD DVD titled Kick Snare, Hat: The Superstars of Hip-Hop Drumming, Coleman-Dunham also has devoted her time to others through G.A.G.U, an interactive workbook that is a life guide for all young people.

G.A.G.U. explores options that young people can choose after high school and encourages them to get in the habit of learning for the sake of their overall growth in preparation for adulthood. Some of the options that Coleman-Dunham explores in the book include college, trade school, the work force and the military.

A sense of history is written into the pre-show and main show during the readings, and audience members also will see history in action through the American Legacy Mobile Museum Tour, which will visit the read-in site on Saturday from 1 to 5 p.m. The mobile museum is an interactive, traveling exhibit of African-American history that focuses on the milestones and newsmakers of the 20th century. Children and families who attend the DCCCD read-in are welcome to tour the museum free that day. The American Legacy Mobile Museum also will welcome visitors during three other visits in the Dallas area during Feb-

- Sun., Feb. 7, at the African American Museum in Fair Park, 3536 Grand Ave., from 12 to 4 p.m.
- Mon., Feb. 8, at DCCCD's Mountain View College (west campus parking lot), located at 4849 W. Illinois Ave. from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; and
- Tues., Feb. 9, at DCCCD's Richard College (East Circle Drive), 12800 Abrams Rd., from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Performances and works also will be presented by Alice Childress, Buster Spiller, Hill Harper, Chinua Achebe, Osley Cook Jr. and The Alumni, O.W. Holmes Drumline, William Hibler, DFW Poetry SLAM, Dallas Black Dance Theatre, New Arts Six, Act of Change, Kris Ray, W.E. Greiner Academy Dance Group, Michael Guinn, N.I.A. Performance Arts Academy, plus the annual Writer's Walk.

All audience members will receive a free book, tote bag and T-shirt that celebrates the read-in.

Emerging Business Program set to host second workshop

Event at Cowboys Stadium will provide minority- and women-owned businesses with hands-on training and information on Super Bowl XLV procurement opportunities

(NDG Wire) The North Texas Super Bowl XLV Host Committee recently announced the second in a series of three workshops designed to educate minorityand women-owned business entities on how to pursue business-related opportunities for next year's Super Bowl. This second workshop, titled "Training Camp," will take place Feb. 25 from 9 a.m.-12 noon at Cowboys Stadium in Arlington. Texas Instruments is the official sponsor for the Emerging Business Program.

NFL contractors will be on site to answer questions and offer first-hand knowledge of what to expect. Also offering advice will be experts from the banking and insurance industries. "Training Camp" will offer plenty of interaction during the networking and exhibit session starting at 11 a.m. The goal is to provide answers to questions area businesses might have.

"The second workshop is called 'Training Camp' because we will focus on specific topics and provide more in-depth information," said Robbie Douglas, the Host Committee's director of business development, who oversees the program. "We're going to talk about possible obstacles and hurdles for businesses who participate."

Co-chairs of the Host Committee's Emerging Business Program Action Team, Gina Puente-Brancato and Emmitt Smith, will speak at the workshop. Also presenting will be Tisha Ford, the NFL's Manager, Events Business Development.

"We've been very impressed by the excitement of the North Texas emerging business community," said Ford. "The turnout at the first event in Fort Worth was outstanding (better than 600 businesses were in attendance). The program really seems to be taking hold in the community and is making terrific progress."

While participation in the program does not guarantee receipt of Super Bowl

XLV-related contracts, the NFL and North Texas Super Bowl XLV Host Committee want interested minority- and women-owned businesses to be educated about the procurement process and have an introduction to potential purchasing entities. To fully understand the NFL's procurement process and opportunities offered via the program, attendance at these events is highly recommended. Attendance at the first two workshops is not a requirement, but businesses owners wishing to have an opportunity to earn service contracts must be registered online no later than March 31, 2010.

To register for the workshop online, visit www.north texassuperbowl.com/workshopregistration.

For more information on the program, see www.northtexassuperbowl.com/emergingbusiness.

Super Bowl XLV will be played in Cowboys Stadium on Feb. 6, 2011.

Banquet says 'Thanks A Million' to loyal consumers by giving away $1 million in redeemable cash prizes

(NDG Wire) Banquet, a brand of ConAgra Foods announced the kick-off of its "Thanks a Million" promotion for consumers. Beginning today and running through April 2010, more than 16,000 promotional Banquet single-serve dinners will contain redeemable cash prizes ranging in value from $10 to $100,000.

The "Thanks a Million" promotion is designed to thank Banquet's loyal customers while also providing a little bit of financial relief. With the economy still struggling, families across the country continue to work hard to put food on the table and make grocery shopping stress-free and cost-effective. Additionally, more consumers are looking for ways to save money on meals, and Banquet provides good, quality meals for families to enjoy at affordable prices.

For example, Supermarket Guru Phil Lempert conducted a national survey that found that more than 60 percent of consumers have eaten more meals at home and 56 percent have bought less expensive brands - such as Banquet - during the prior six months. By giving consumers the chance to win a little extra spending money through the "Thanks a Million" promotion, Banquet affords its consumers the opportunity to do what matters most to them: provide for their family and friends.

"We know that times are tough for a lot of Americans right now, especially when it comes to providing their families with good, quality food without breaking the bank," said Tom McGough, vice president and general manager of Banquet at ConAgra Foods. "Banquet wants to reward our loyal customers and say 'thanks' by giving them a little extra spending money."

Consumers should look for Banquet's "Thanks a Million" promotion at any retailer where Banquet frozen meals are sold. Seventeen different Banquet singleserve dinner meals are included in the promotion, with a "Thanks a Million" announcement on the front package to help consumers identify participating meals.

Each package includes instructions on how to redeem any cash prize, which is provided in the form of a check. Non-winning packages include coupons so all consumers receive some form of "thanks" for participating in the promotion. The end-date of the promotion is subject to promotional product availability.

Money makes people happy, especially if they're paid by the hour

BY CHRISTINE BLACKMAN STANDFORD UNIVERSITY

Money makes people happy, and more so for workers paid by the hour than by salary, according to researchers at Stanford and the University of Toronto. The relationship between money and happiness is stronger for people paid by the hour because they are more often reminded of how much they earn, and this makes money more salient in their thinking.

"If you are paid by the hour or account for your time on a timesheet, you begin to see the world in terms of money and in terms of economic evaluation," said Jeffrey Pfeffer, the Thomas D. Dee II Professor of Organizational Behavior at the Stanford Graduate School of Business. "To the extent that time becomes like money and money becomes more salient, the linkage between how much you earn and your happiness increases."

Hourly paid employees know the exact worth of each hour of work. They think about their income regularly and begin comparing the value of their time to the amount of their happiness

Pfeffer and Sanford DeVoe of the University of Toronto studied data from American and British surveys of income, hourly vs. salary pay status and general happiness. The surveys showed that pay determines the happiness of hourly workers more than it does for people paid by salary.

Money linked to wage awareness

The researchers ran their own experiments to demonstrate that even salaried people would rely more on income to evaluate their happiness if they were made aware of their implicit hourly wage. They asked people to assess their happiness, requiring a random set of the participants to first calculate their hourly earnings. They rated statements such as "I am satisfied with my life" and answered questions such as "Have you been feeling unhappy and depressed?"

Salaried participants who made the calculations used their income to rate happiness about as much as did hourly paid participants.

"If they're thinking about their income, then all of a sudden, even people who are paid by salary become much more like hourly paid workers; they think of their time in terms of money, the connection between income and happiness goes up and they become economic evaluators of their use of time in their life," Pfeffer said.

The study shows that organizational practices such as paying people by the hour affect employees beyond the workplace, Pfeffer said. Workers begin to think differently about money, time and happiness. "How organizations pay people has profound effects outside of that organizational context. If you're paid by the hour, you come to see your time in a certain way that doesn't change when you walk out of your employer's door."

The study was published Dec. 1, 2009, in the Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin.

lence of public attitudes. There are some that believe that the very poor in Haiti, like Katrina victims, are not worth assisting and that these culturally dysfunctional misfits should be sent elsewhere. New York Times columnist David Brooks wrote in a recent op-ed that. "Haiti, like most of the world's poorest nations, suffers from a complex web of progress-resistant cultural influences." Brooks, however, fails to mention the role of U.S. trade policy in destroying Haiti's former thriving economy.

The Republic was established on January 1, 1804 following a slave uprising against the French colonial rulers. The country produced three-quarters of the world's sugar by 1789 and also lead the world in production of coffee, cotton, indigo, and rum. The slave masters provided France with enormous wealth from the labor of their 450,000 slaves. The white population, including poor overseers and artisans, numbered 40,000 of Haiti.

Despite American support, in principle, for independence movements there was little enthusiasm for the efforts of Haiti's slaves to end their enslavement and establish the New World's second republican government.

Between 1791-1804, the slave population of the French colony of Haiti revolted against the white minority. The revolt appalled Europe as well as the newly independent United States of America. The United States, because of its commercial interests with the French colony, sent the French $750,000 in military aid as well as some troops to help quell the revolt.

The Treaty of Alliance of 1778 signed by France and the United States required that the United States protect French colonies in the New World. American merchants also hoped to exploit the loss of French control over the colony and extend the commercial interests of the United States into the West Indian market. The ongoing French Revolution, the Quasi War, and anxiety about the future of the Louisiana Territory and the port at New Orleans also effected American policy decisions.

The French commander in Haiti wrote Napoleon that it would be necessary to wipe out virtually the entire black population to impose French rule. However, his campaign failed and Haiti became the only case in history of an enslaved people breaking its own chains and using military might to beat back a powerful ruler.

The Haitian victory came at tremendous cost. Much of the agricultural wealth of the country was destroyed, along with perhaps a third of the population.

The victory horrified Haiti's slave-holding neighbors, who backed France's claims for huge reparations, which Haiti finally accepted in 1825 as a precondition for participation in the global marketplace.

The United States did not recognize Haiti as a nation until 1862.

While Presidents Washington, Adams and Jefferson made policy decisions detrimental to Haiti it was during Jefferson's tenure that the revolt's critical mass developed.

There has always been a contradiction between Jefferson's ownership of slaves and his expressed belief in the rights of all to enjoy liberty. One aspect of Jefferson's beliefs was both Blacks and Whites would always view each other in racial terms and when slavery no longer existed blacks would rebel due to the long years of intense and cruel oppression. This view of slavery led Jefferson to support the concept of colonization in a new country as the ultimate solution to the slavery problem.

Jefferson had initially expressed to the French in 1801 that the "United States opposed Haiti's independence under Black rule and wanted to see French authority restored. The French emissary reported to Paris that it was Jefferson's "dread of the blacks, not devotion to French interests" that motivated his offer of assistance to the French.

Jefferson's policy changed when Napoleon was in desperate need of money to support his army resulted in Jefferson making the largest land acquisition in American history, the Louisiana Purchase.

Therefor, the ultimate change in Jefferson's policy that contributed to France's defeat in Haiti was due to geopolitical and commercial implications impacting the balance of power in the Caribbean and not a moral imperative to support the emancipation of an oppressed people.

Forget the deficit; people need jobs

BY REV. JESSE JACKSON SR.

(NNPA) The state of America's union is stark. The economic collapse triggered by the bursting of the housing bubble continues to take its toll.

We know the statistics. Nearly one in five American workers is unemployed or underemployed. That means wages are losing ground.

One in three homes with a mortgage is under water. Millions of Americans are headed to losing their homes. That will leave families adrift, children displaced.

The desperate effort to keep the financial system from failing has succeeded. It has saved the big banks - leaving them more concentrated than ever -- but not succeeded in removing the clot in financing. Small businesses can't get loans; homeowners can't get mortgages adjusted. Finance is like the blood of the economy. When there is a clot, the economy can't work and people suffer.

Republicans argue that the president's recovery plan has failed. Then they prescribe the same poison that created the breakdown in the first place. They want more top-end tax cuts, more breaks for business, more deregulation. We tried tax cuts under President George W. Bush; it leads nowhere.

The reality is that the recovery plan created or saved millions of jobs. Aid to states and localities kept teachers and police from being laid off in large numbers. Spending on infrastructure helped put some to work. Investment in new energy created new jobs. Aid to the unemployed --extending unemployment benefits, subsidizing health care COBRA payments, and providing food stamps -- put money into the pockets of those who need it most.

The problem with the president's plan -- as any honest economist will tell you -- is that it wasn't big enough. The collapse was far deeper than the president's economists predicted.

We need another big jobs program. Aid should go to states and localities that now face brutal cuts that will lay off teachers, police and professors. Public jobs programs -- a green corps, an urban corps -should target hard-hit areas like the Midwest and urban centers. We should invest in infrastructure by repairing schools, weatherizing public buildings and creating the projects that will hire construction workers.

Without these commitments, there will be no recovery. Businesses won't expand into an economy in which one in five people are unemployed. Exports won't increase -- particularly with the Chinese continuing to manipulate their currency. Consumers have taken a $10 trillion hit on assets, and are tightening their belts. States and localities are facing brutal cuts. People are confused and angry. They see high deficits and think the money is going to Wall Street. There is a crisis of confidence as well as a grinding fear of what comes next.

Here we need the president to lead and take on the naysayers and the false leaders. He must lay out what needs to be done, and rally the country to act.

The pollsters say independents are angry about deficits, so Washington is talking about deficit reduction. "If we expect families to balance their budgets in hard times, shouldn't the government do so also?" goes the mantra.

That is the big lie because, in reality, when everyone else is cutting back, government must step in and put people to work. This will require deficits because tax revenues are down and expenditures on unemployment and food stamps are up.

The simple fact is, you can't balance the budget without generating economic growth. Any attempt to do so now will deepen the downturn. Once people go back to work, and the economy gets going, tax revenues will go up, emergency spending will decline and steps can be taken to bring the deficit down. But it is utter foolishness to do so before people are at work.

That's why the State of the Union is so important. It is vital that the president use this moment to set the direction, to rally the coun-

Sister Tarpley

Editor's Note: We invite our readers to enjoy Sis. Tarpley's column on the importance of Black History Month which was originally published February 8, 2007. Each year teachers and parents use this column to hilight the importance of celebrating the achievements and contributions of Black Americans.

This is not just Black History that we are celebrating; not just America's history, but World History. Many great and useful inventions that are being used worldwide and that are taken for granted were invented by Black Americans.

Henry T. Sampson in 1971 invented the cell phone; and how many cell phones do you see in use today? Dr. Philip Emeagwali, considered a 'father of the Internet' helped give birth to the 'supercomputer' the technology that spawned the Internet, World Wide Web (WWW.) Otis Bovkin invented more than 25 electronic devices that are used in computers and guided missiles today. Frederick M. Jones on February 23, 1960 invented the Thermostat Control. P. Johnson on November 2, 1880 invented the Eye Protector.

Black History Month

How many industries that are vital to America's success have been profoundly influenced by the contributions of Black Inventors? There is an endless list of contributions by Black people in America. We would not have much agriculture and automobiles products; and communications as we know it.

Thank God for Black History Month.

Some individuals think it's an accident that Black Americans have done anything worthwhile. Some people easily accept that we have a few famous entertainers, sports figures and a few entrepreneurs making millions of dollars; but they are slow to recognize that there are many Black Americans that have excelled, and are continuing to excel and invent useful and life-changing changing devices, they use math and science to make a difference in how we live, work, play, and entertain today.

As a parent, grandparent, and a teacher, I also wish that all history of great magnitude is put in our textbooks especially Black history, which is American's history; in spite of what we have been taught. But wishing it is not going to get the information in our textbooks on the grand scale that it needs to be. It's going to take some changed minds and hearts of our society to accomplish that.

What needs to be done is for Texas and California, two states that purchase the largest amount of textbooks, request that our textbooks are updated with relevant, useful and accurate history. I guarantee you that when it's the bottom line (business profits) that counts and it's in the best interest of publishers; our history books will reflect history more accurately.

Read the story of Carter Godwin Woodson, Father of Black History (December 1875 – April 1950, it is a captivating and inspiration story in itself. Dr. Woodson said, "Those who have no record of what their forebears have accomplished lose the inspiration which comes from the teaching of biography and history."

Dr. Woodson, a distinguished Black author, editor, publisher, and historian who put his money, life, blood, sweat and tears in establishing Black History Week, (in the 1960s it was established as Black History MONTH) he believed that Blacks should know their past in order to participate intelligently in the affairs in our country. He strongly believed that Black history—which others (even some Black Americans) have tried so diligently to erase—is a firm foundation for young Black Americans to build on in order to become productive citizens of our society.

Dr. Woodson often said that he hoped the time would come when Negro History Week would be unnecessary; when all Americans would willingly recognize the contributions of Black Americans as a legitimate and integral part of the history of this country. His concept has given a profound sense of dignity to all Black Americans; and we must not forget it! Nor should we stop Black History Month.

This program can be used for financing equipment or making payroll. You will need some collateral to qualify for this type of loan, however the guarantee has been increased to 90%.

The other popular program is the 504. This is geared toward commercials financing of property. If you have a business that needs purchase new or additional property for expansion and to grow this program could be for you.

Many small business owners have tried a more conventional approach to funding and have been turned down. This is where the SBA can help. With the guarantee many banks will except more risky loans. The problem is many owners do not understand the loan types and what they need to qualify. Taking time to learn about the SBA can pay off in the form of a loan guaranteed by the SBA.
