The secret relationship between African-Americans and Jews

BY NICOLE SCOTT
NDG CONTRIBUTING WRITER

At the risk of sounding presumptuous, I think it would be safe to write if you polled the African-American community most would not know what the AIPAC is, nor the huge political influence it yields. In fact I would be willing to bet a significant wager many would probably guess the A in the acronym stands for African-American. I would not consider this an indication of their lack of intelligence nor political involvement. Instead it is a general unawareness within the African-American community as it relates to the state of Israel, Jewish-Americans connection to Israel, and the political clout they carry.

Free family fun at 2012 Community Fest

The 2nd Annual 2012 Community Fest is Saturday, April 7 at Antioch Christian Church, in Irving. Building on the success of last year's event, the 2012 festival organizers expect excited members all aiming to give back to the community.

All too often, communities surrounding churches complain that the church only wants to take. You can stand on any corner and hear someone say that they do not go to church because they are bombarded with three or four offerings. Antioch Christian Church throughout the year has shared donated items to give away to those in need. For example, last year the members banded together to make the Community Fest possible.

Pastor McGill shared, "Our goal is to show the love of Christ. We wanted not to take but to give."

The family event is completely free and open to all who wish to attend. The event will be a day of giving and will include free food, toys, diapers, new and gently used

Romney intends to expand war on women and everyday families

GOP Presidential candidate Mitt Romney visited Dallas last week, bringing to Texas his support of dangerous policy proposals like making even more cuts to preventive services for women and the far-right Ryan budget.

"The GOP's war on women isn't confined to Texas," said Congresswoman Eddie Bernice Johnson (D-Dallas). "Mitt Romney pledges to replicate Rick Perry's assault on women's preventive care across the nation. Women cannot trust Republicans with their health. By proposing to do what Rick Perry has done here in Texas, Mitt Romney is endangering the well-being of millions of American women. Romney continues to prove that he has no core beliefs and will say and do anything to get elected."

Just in 2002, Romney sought the endorsement

Ladies who's your Sugar Daddy?

If you have had your last Redbox night with a man still living at home with his mama, without a car, and unemployed (or self-employed as the CEO of a record label) then perhaps SeekingArrangement.com is the site for you. The site is the largest dating website for Sugar Babies looking for a Sugar Daddy.

Brandon Wade recently released a five-year statistical study about Sugar Daddies. He collected the data via his website. Dallas ranked 16 on the list of cities with the most Sugar Daddies per capita, and 20 on the list of cities with the most generous Sugar Daddies. The Sugar Daddies in Los Angeles spend the most at $5,710 monthly, followed by New York at $5,002.

Ladies, there are 95 African-American Sugar Daddies in Dallas with an average net worth of $5.5 million. And don't worry if your Sugar Daddy will be too old to keep up with you because the average age for a Dallas Sugar Daddy is a very young 42 years old. The Dallas Sugar Daddy on average spends $3,969 per month on his sugar addition, but beware 41 percent of them are married.

Dr. Venus Opal Reese

At age 16, Dr. Venus Opal Reese was living on the Baltimore streets surrounded by violence, drugs and prostitution. She was quiet; she hardly talked at all.

Today, Reese is an outspoken, accomplished playwright. She has a second master's degree and a PhD from Stanford University, and she is an associate professor of aesthetic studies at UT Dallas.

Reese will share her story on Friday, March 30, at 8th annual "WOW: Words of Wisdom"

Women's Conference at the Hyatt Regency DFW.

"The predictable outcome of my situation was welfare, addiction and, ultimately, death. My life is a living demonstration that anything is possible. My passion is for inspiring high achievers, from the inside out, to change the world," Reese said.

In the ninth grade, Reese went to class smelling as if she had slept in an alley the night before — because she had. One teacher intervened when she realized Reese's situation. Her name was Judy Francis.

"She gave me a love that can't be earned," Reese said.

Francis cared for the 16-year-old Reese with more than warm meals — the teacher also pressed the student to write poetry. When Reese set the pen to the pad, the outcome was first place in a NAACP national poetry contest.

Winning the contest fueled Reese down the path she has taken, and it has also led her to found an organization called Defy Impossible, which aims to motivate and challenge others to break through their inner barriers.

"I allow people to feel and be heard, fulfilled, powerful, peaceful and proud of the difference they make in the quality of life for the human race," Reese added.

Apart from her motivational speaking, Dr. Reese is an award winning solo performer, playwright, director, choreographer and poet. Her latest solo performance work, Split Ends, a piece about black women and hair, was featured on the cover of the Palo Alto Weekly, showcased at the Black Repertory Theatre in Rhode Island and run off-Broadway at La MaMa ETC.

As a scholar, Dr. Reese's research re-imagines Africa, the middle passage, antebellum slavery, minstrelsy and popular culture through stories told.

Thoughts of business cards and company displays danced in the heads of the 100-plus Dallas-area residents who attended the Dallas-Richardson Chocolate Blues and Business Networking Festival on March 27 at the Richardson Civic Center.

The networking event ran from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and gave business owners the opportunity showcase their businesses and learn about services provided by their neighbors.

"It was a huge success. We had more visitors than expected," said Anthony Jones, area director of the Dallas-Richardson Chocolate Blues and Business Networking Festival. "The vendors were cooperative and self-sustaining."

Jones said approximately 70 vendors took part in the festival with at least 100 individual attendees participating in open networking. Participating companies included insurance companies, health and wellness businesses, and small business solutions vendors.

For some participants, it was the chance to visit with friends they meet in other network events.

"The more people you see, the more opportunities you have to sell," said George Clemons, mid-market sales executive for Fonality Inc. in Plano.

Dr. Naikai Butler of Hearing Services of North Texas in Dallas has participated in network events such as this since the inception of her practice nearly a year ago. The audiologist said she has built a network that allows her to feed patients into her practice and make valuable connections.

"The key is to figure out how to work these events, and keep the opportunity to network with those in and outside your field open," the Dallas native said.

Vendors were also treated to entertainment, door prizes, and roundtable workshops on subjects such as cold calling techniques (TrustPoint Management CEO Karl Graf and marketing director Stephanie Ward); effective networking (Elizabeth McCormick from Tech Savvy); why salespeople fail and making the gatekeeper your friend (David Tyson of Sandler Training); and reaping the benefits of LinkedIn (Lucinda Ruch from The Alternative Board).

Jones, who is managing director of business Development at Alternative Business Consulting Solutions in Dallas, said he expects that two more Chocolate Blues and Business Networking events to be held in 2012 in the Dallas area.

MillerCoors granted $125,000 to four small business owners through its MillerCoors Urban Entrepreneurs Series (MUES). The grand prize winner, Ola Ayeni, CEO of tomer base, received a $50,000 investment grant and three runners-up will receive $25,000 each.

"This is a big step for me and my business," said Ayeni. "This will help me get the resources I need to succeed and one day do the same thing MillerCoors is doing — help other entrepreneurs bring their businesses to life."

The ultimate goal of the MUES program is to create a pipeline of potential MillerCoors suppliers. Supplier diversity, community investment and economic empowerment are priorities for MillerCoors. The brewer has set a target to cumulatively spend more than $2.5 billion with minority-owned and women-owned suppliers by 2015.

"We believe these emerging businesses and the jobs they are creating are the key to growing and developing urban communities across the U.S.," said Larry Waters, director of multicultural relations for MillerCoors. "The entrepreneurs involved in MUES are dynamic and innovative business owners. Our support and guidance gives them the motivation and resources they need to take their business to new heights."

The business plan competition was established in 1999 as a valuable resource for entrepreneurs to grow their businesses, create jobs and make a powerful impact in their communities. MUES has awarded nearly $1.7 million in grants to more than 100 emerging businesses and offers fundamental resources for all participating entrepreneurs, including instructional webinars, interactive social media platforms and guidance from some of the leading business minds in the country.

MillerCoors awarded Ayeni a $50,000 grant and three runners-up each received $25,000. Winners were honored during a special reception on Thursday, March 8, at the MillerCoors Corporate Headquarters in Chicago, IL. Co-star of ABC's Shark Tank and founder of FUBU, Daymond John, served as the event's guest speaker, sharing his entrepreneurial experiences.

Affordable housing Out of Reach

BY CHARLENE CROW-ELL

Late last year America's homeownership rate dropped to 66 percent, the lowest since 1998. Amid continuing foreclosures and short sales, millions of former proud homeowners now find the cost of their American Dream financially out of reach. For many displaced by foreclosures, rental housing has become a long-term housing alternative. But new research finds that the huge growth in America's renters has worsened an already troubling problem: an inadequate supply of affordable housing.

According to Out of Reach 2012, an annual report by the National Low Income Housing Coalition, renter households rose by nearly 4 million between 2005 and 2010.

In 2012, a household must earn the equivalent of $37,960 in annual income to afford the national average cost of a two-bedroom market rate of $949 per month. To comfortably afford market price for the typical rental, incomes must meet or exceed $18.25 per hour. However Out of Reach found that the 2012 average renter's wage was a few dollars less at $14.15.

This gap between housing costs and typical worker earnings will continue to grow until or unless more affordable housing becomes available. Looking ahead, over the next decade the report predicts that the number of renters may increase by upwards of 470,000 annually.

Letter to the editor: Agent 007's Slate for Irving

Many people jokingly and fondly call me, James Bond, Agent 007, when they first discover my last name is Bond. But in all seriousness it does not take an undercover agent of any kind to decipher what is going on in the upcoming, Irving city, school board, and the newly formed 33rd Congressional district elections during the month of May.

The "Old White Guard" in Irving is up in arms and organizing like never before to keep candidates who embrace the diversity in Irving from being elected to the Irving City Council, The Irving Independent School Board (IISD) or to the U.S. Congress in the 33rd District.

In my opinion, we the Minority community cannot sit back apathetically and let this happen. We are now the majority group in Irving. If Black, Hispanics, Asians, and Native Indians, all voted there is no way this Old White Guard subgroup can ever control an election in Irving ever again.

Former IISD Interim Superintendent, Niel Dugger said it best, "We need to have a salad bowl mentality in Irving now." Meaning just like in a salad, for it to be the best salad it needs to have all the ingredients in it and they all must be there together to make that salad the best that it can be. Likewise for Irving to be the best that it can be, all of the subgroups in Irving must be respected equally by our elected leaders and appreciated for what they represent and bring to Irving.

Therefore, this Agent 007 is recommending, Valerie Jones and AD Jenkins for the IISD Board, Bill Mahoney, Rick Stopfer and Fran Bonilla for Irving City of Planned Parenthood in Massachusetts. Now that he's running for President, Mitt Romney said he'd balance the federal budget in part by defunding Planned Parenthood. Millions of American women rely on Planned Parenthood for cancer screenings and low-cost contraception, and other preventive services.

Republicans like Mitt Romney continue to prioritize special interests and corporations over the needs of everyday families," said Representative Roberto Alonzo (D-Dallas). "Texans have unfortunately already gotten a glimpse of what something like the Ryan budget would do to essential state services. Families in our state are dealing with an irresponsible budget passed by Texas Republicans that cuts taxes for corporations and the wealthy and cuts critical services for kids and seniors. Just like the Texas Legislature, national Republicans are doubling down with the Ryan budget that hurts our children, our schools and our seniors."

Both Romney's and Ryan's budget plans turn Medicare into a voucher program, increase health care costs to seniors by thousands of dollars, and give massive tax cuts to the wealthiest. Paul Ryan's plan would use deep budget cuts to help pay for $150,000 in tax breaks for millionaires and billionaires, while Romney's plan would provide even deeper tax cuts for the wealthy, adding trillions to the deficit.

Seniors await fate of Health Reform following Supreme Court hearing

Seniors were among the many supporters and opponents of the 2010 health care law kept a close eye on the Supreme Court last week, as the court heard oral arguments on the case to overturn the Affordable Care Act. At the center of the case is whether the mandate to buy health insurance is constitutional.

In arguing their side in the press, supporters of the law highlighted all of the benefits that millions of Americans have received thanks to the law's provisions. The Maryland/DC Alliance for Retired Americans was one of several organizations present at the front of the Supreme Court this week, and their members expressed their confidence that the law is constitutional.

The court's ruling, which is set to come in June, could change the interpretation of Congress' scope of power and have major implications for modern government.

Should health care reform be struck down, seniors risk losing many of the new benefits provided through the law. The shrinking doughnut hole - the coverage gap that leaves seniors paying thousands out of pocket for lifesaving medications - will open back up, leaving many seniors to pay much more for vital and costly medications. The free preventive care and annual wellness visit benefits that are now offered will disappear as well.

"If any part of the law is repealed, seniors could lose a great deal of their health care protection and security," said Ruben Burks, Secretary-Treasurer of the Alliance. "In addition, Medicare Advantage overpayments to insurance companies could end, meaning that Medicare's Trust Fund would run out sooner."

Water District Board recommends easing Stage 3 Water Restrictions

The North Texas Municipal Water District (NTMWD) Board of Directors last week recommended making the Stage 3 water restrictions less stringent by allowing once-per-week watering rather than the current twice-monthly schedule.

Most of the local cities are following the board's recommendation. However, contact City Hall in your community before resetting your sprinklers.

The North Texas Municipal Water District (NTMWD) made its recommended change to Stage 3 restrictions because recent rainfall has replenished its water supplies. However, Lake Texoma remains unavailable because of the presence of zebra mussels, an invasive species. Lake Texoma provides approximately 28 percent of the NTMWD water supply.

Conservation remains a priority as the hot summer months approach and NTMWD's water supply is restricted because of Lake Texoma.

Are tax credits a necessary piece of the puzzle for South Dallas Development?

BY: JACQUINETTE MURPHY

WRITER

Reverend Donald Parish, Sr. the senior pastor of True Lee Missionary Baptist Church at 3907 Bertrand Avenue in South Dallas is looking for a spark of hope for his community.

"This community has been so depressed that we are just looking for anything that would stimulate growth in this area," he shared.

For more than a decade, Dallas developers used tax credits as a key to unlock the door to building

Frazier Courtyard Homes features forty single family townhome units standing in the place of the once barrack-styled multi-housing project built in the 1940s and 1950s. This renovation was enabled through the federal tax credit program and the partnership of the city with local community developers. Eleven more units are scheduled for building by the Inner Community Development Corporation.

Tax credits are defined as a dollar-for-dollar reduction in the income tax liability for the investors of housing tax credit properties. After the amount of tax is calculated on the property, the tax credit award is deducted from the total fees. This deduction aims to make the construction offer more attractive for potential investors by putting "free" dollars into a project. This results in the investor actually spending less money out-of-pocket.

Parrish stated, "We need tax credits to do development in our area because not a lot of people are doing development to the Fair Park area. It makes the project more doable."

The idea of awarding tax credits is a result of the 1986 Internal Revenue Service (IRS) federal tax reform code (Public Law No. 99-514, 100 Stat. 2085) developed to form a funding mechanism to ensure the sustained availability of affordable housing properties in the United States. It provides a legal means of directing private capital toward the development and preservation of affordable rental housing for low-income families.

Although, the initiative began on a federal level, the tax incentives are actually distributed by the state-level government agencies managing the funds for projects within their boundaries. Annually, a regional allocation formula (RAF) dictates the amount of tax credit awards assigned to the states for disbursement to developers through a competitive bidding process.

In Texas, the Texas Department on Housing and Community Affairs Agency (TDHCA) is the overseer of the tax credit allocation for the construction projects in the state of of tax credits has brought revitalization to the housing aspect of the still incomplete Southern Dallas community development puzzle, but Parrish sees it as kindling. "It is my hope that this would be a catalyst to spur more development and that people would start move in instead of moving out of the area. Success breeds success. We need something to stimulate this area." He continued, "Once it starts, other people would want to come in."

Recently, Dallas Mayor Mike Rawlings expressed his focused initiative to bring full-scaled development to the Southern Sector of Dallas. He unveiled Grow South, a master economic development plan aimed to create sustainable neighborhoods. In the one-hour presentation, he outlined and pledged to create and personally oversee private equity investment funds directed to cleanup, promote and attract corporate business, major restaurant and retail establishments south of the Trinity.

With the introduction of the mayors plan, and the continued HTC construction projects the community development of the long desolate Southern Dallas area has a dual opportunity to be revitalized.

affordable housing in the Southern Dallas area. However, they have failed to find an effective combination to open the gateway to creating economically sound communities for its residents.

Since 1999, 125 tax credits supported constructions have been completed in the City of Dallas according a recent housing report. Approximately 75 percent of the projects are in the South Dallas area. In 2004 and 2005, tax credit awards supported the renovation of the Frazier Courts multi-housing project into a town home community complete with

Yet today, the North-South Gap remains a stubborn divisor in the city's overall economic growth plan and brings to question of whether or not the use of tax credits alone has simply been a patch for the long absence of a true master plan for communities south of the Trinity River Corridor, I-45 and I-

Texas. Its program, called the Housing Tax Credit Program (HTC) allows private developers to apply for project funding awards to offset the cost of constructing the housing developments.

Cities such as the City of Dallas become conduits that help funnel the developers through paperwork, and manage the process for gaining the essential project permissions. The city benefits from this program through the increase in the base value of the

Additionally, little to none of the project can be combined with retail, restaurant, transit or other related development plans. HOUSING, continued from Page 3

The report states in part, "The analysis illustrates a wide gap between the cost of decent housing and the hourly wages that renters actually earn. The numbers in Out of Reach demonstrate that this year in every community across the country, there are renters working full-time who are unable to afford the rents where they live."

In 2012, many who are severely cost-burdened are adult workers whose wages are less than their locale's fair market rent. Determined by HUD on an annual basis, fair market rent reflects the cost of both shelter and utilities. This federal standard is also used to determine eligibility for HUD's Housing Choice Voucher program and Section 8 contracts.

Out of Reach found that in every state an individual working full-time at the federal minimum wage of $7.25 per hour cannot afford a two-bedroom apartment for his or her family. In fact, there are very few places in the country where even a one-bedroom apartment at fair market rent is affordable to these workers.

Currently 18 states have minimum wages higher than that of the federal government and earlier this year, the City of San Francisco became the first in the nation to have a minimum wage above $10 an hour. Unfortunately, California rates third highest in the nation's rental housing costs with $26.02 an hour needed for a two-bedroom dwelling. Other states where a two-bedroom apartment would require an hourly wage of $20.00 or more are: Connecticut, DC, Hawaii, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, and Virginia.

Based on a federal standard, affordable housing should cost no more than 30 percent of a household's gross income. When housing costs exceed this threshold, the residents are considered 'housing burdened'. When housing costs more than 50 percent of household income, the households are 'severely cost burdened'.

By 2010, extremely low-income (ELI) workers, those earning less than 30 percent of the area median income rose to 9.8 million people, or one out of every four renter households. For every 100 ELI households in search of an apartment, only 30 affordable units are available. NHLIC estimates that an additional 6.8 million additional rental units are needed to overcome this shortage.

Commenting on the NHLIC report, HUD Secretary Shaun Donovan said, "This perfect storm of growing need and rising costs is why it is more important than ever that we provide a supply of affordable rental homes at the scale that families require and in the places that need them."

Secretary Donovan has proposed that HUD's FY13 budget make renewing rental assistance for over 5.4 million families the agency's top priority.

Here's hoping that Secretary Donovan's budget request will fare better than earlier housing efforts. In 2008, the National Affordable Housing Trust Fund was enacted for the purpose of building more affordable housing. In 2012, it remains unfunded.

Talk with Spider

BY DONALD WILLIS

Trayvon Martin's life was just beginning as a young man with goals and aspirations to become a football player like many other kids in America. That all changed on February 27, 2012 when George Zimmerman took the law in his hand and killed him. Zimmerman decided the teen looked like he was up to something. The fact he was wearing a hoodie was a factor.

The mainstream media, and thus the American public, equates a hoodie with being a "gangsta" because so many rappers wear them. However, throughout history men have worn "hoodies" for a variety of reasons.

There are plenty of cultures whose attire includes hoodies for protection from bad weather, religious reasons, fashion and sometimes hatred. For example, Eastern European monks wore hoods to hide their identity as they prepared for priesthood.

Don't judge a hoodie by its cover

Until recent years, many associated hoodies as the signature look of the Klu Klux Klan when it was founded in 1865. Their desire to hide their identity certainly predates gangsta rap.

Where are the Rush Limbaugh, Geraldo Rivera, Sean Hannity and others so quick to judge an African-American youth wearing a hoodie, but remarkably silent when it comes to an organization who wears a white hood to hide their face?

Where are the pundits when Bill Belichick the head coach for the New England Patriots wears a hoodie on the sidelines with cut off sleeves? Does his attire make him dangerous?

High school, college, and professional athletes wear hoodies regularly. The players are merely trying to protect themselves from the cold weather of a stadium or gymnasium.

Yes, the hip-hop community created a fad. Then mainstream rushes to spotlight negative connotations, as they did with Ken Griffey Jr. who wore his cap backward during batting practice. Once urban kids began wearing their caps that way it became a problem.

It's time for America to put a hoodie on its heart and protect it with warmth and love.

Rep. Gonzalez asks Romney to stick to the facts

Congressman Charlie Gonzalez (D-Texas) issued the following statement expressing disappointment over Governor Mitt Romney's comments that mischaracterized President Obama's record on immigration reform:

"Perhaps if Governor Romney hadn't spent the last six years campaigning for President, he might have noticed that it was members of his own party that defeated the DREAM Act and thwarted passage of comprehensive immigration reform. Additionally, it was only during the past few months that Governor

Romney proclaimed Arizona's S.B. 1070 anti-immigrant bill to be a 'model' and promised to veto the DREAM Act. President Obama is committed to passing comprehensive immigration reform and the DREAM Act, but is unable so long as Republicans like Governor Romney, continue to pander to the far-right wing of their base.

After President Barack Obama was elected and forming his cabinet, I remember receiving from one of my Israeli Jewish friends a widely circulated email. The email posed the question whether Obama was forming a cabinet or a minyan. [A minyan is the minimum number of adult men needed for a communal Jewish religious service.]

Obama's administration is inundated with Jews. Some include:

- Former Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel;
- Former Director of the National Economic Council (for the Obama administration) and U.S. Secretary of the Treasury (during President Bill Clinton's administration), Larry Summers;
- U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, Timothy Geithner;
- Chairman of the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission Gary Gensler; and
- New Chief of Staff Jacob Lew

Their presence and Obama's allegiance to them can be seen in his various forms of placating. For example, the annual hosting of a Pesach seder at the White House, Hanukkah celebration and trip to the Western Wall in Jerusalem.

Despite the fact Jews comprise approximately 2 percent of the American population Jewish dollars in politics account for a disproportionate amount.

Media mogul and Democratic National Committee (DNC) "sugar daddy" Haim Saban in 2007 donated upwards of $13 million to political campaigns. He was Clinton's as well as Obama's largest donor, respectively.

Claims from varying sources as the Washington Post to the Jerusalem Post, as well as authors Steven Pease and Henry Feingold contend anywhere from 45 percent to 60 percent of political contributions come from Jews. Leading that charge is the behemoth of lobbying groups, AIPAC the American Israel Public Affairs Committee.

In an interview with Bill Maher, Elizabeth Warren spoke of the relentless barrage of coaxing of Congress by lobbyists and their unrivaled financial backing. She equated them to a "Goliath."

Referring to the bank lobbyists Warren said, "They're coming, not just you know, once a month, once a week or even once a day. These guys are coming in two and three and four times a day. They're making phone calls. They've got the position papers and they just keep slamming in the same direction over and over and over."

AIPAC, which is considered to be one of the most influential lobbying groups on Capitol Hill, spent $4 million in 2010 alone. Its affiliate, the American Israel Education Foundation spends up to $28,000 on elaborate trips to Israel for elected officials and their spouses.

One of AIPAC's more recent gambits is the courting of African-American college students to posture as spokespeople in favor of Israel, and more specifically pro-Israel policy. AIPAC offers African-American students a front row seat in politics by providing all expense paid trips to Washington, D.C., where they can meet congressmen, senators, even the President.

In 2011, at its national policy conference in Washington, AIPAC featured several speakers from HBCU's (Historically Black College and Universities). A semi-annual workshop the Saban Leadership Summit offers the opportunity for, in AIPAC's own words "more than 400 of its top student activists from over 140 campuses to participate in four days of intense political programming and advocacy training. During these seminars, students interact with leading Washington policy makers, Middle East experts and AIPAC leadership development professionals." Saban Leadership Summit, yes brought to you by none other than the aforementioned Haim Saban. The same Haim Saban who has openly stated he has one issue and that issue is Israel.

So while African-Americans are sending their children to HBCU's with the intent of empowering them to better serve the communities from which they come, many are being indoctrinated and recruited to act as buffers against increasing condemnation of the state of Israel and its treatment of the Palestinians. Many of these students previously had limited, if any, knowledge or understanding of Israel's policies. However, after completing AIPAC's crash course in Middle East politics, they rise to become avid mouthpieces championing Israel's "democracy" claiming it "a country whose laws of democratic government ensure the rights of every man, woman and child."

Well, if you are going to impose apartheid upon a people without being called to the carpet, who better to do your bidding than the descendants of slaves?

Who's your daddy?

Sister Tarpley

Perhaps you have read or heard this before. I have had this for a number of years; now that Easter is April 8th, I thought that this is worth thinking about again. It is food for your soul.

A very wealthy man and his only son loved to collect great works of art, especially rare paintings. They had everything in their collection, from Picasso to Raphael. They would often sit together and admire their rare and priceless art.

When the conflict broke out, the son went to war. He was very courageous and died in battle while rescuing another soldier.

The father was notified and grieved deeply for his only son (I can imagine how he felt; I too would grieve deeply if something happened to Jarrell, my only son.)

About a month later, there was a knock at the door. A young man stood at the door with a large package in his hand. He said, "Sir, you don't know me, but I am the soldier for whom your son gave his life. He saved many lives that day, and he was carrying me to safety when a bullet struck him; he died instantly. He often talked about you, and your deep love for rare and priceless art." The young man held out this package. "I know this isn't much. I'm not really a great artist, but I think your son would have wanted you to have this."

The father opened the package. It was a portrait of his only son, painted by the young man. He stared in awe at the way the soldier had captured the personality of his son in the painting. The father was so drawn to the eyes that his own eyes welled up with tears. He really cried!

He thanked the young man and offered to pay him for the picture of his only son, perhaps it was the last picture taken of his son. The young man said, "Oh, no sir, I could never repay you for what your son did for me, he saved me! It's a gift."

The father proudly hung the portrait over his mantle. Every time visitors came to his home to look at his priceless works of art, he took them to see his most valuable possession, the portrait of his son, before he showed them any of the other great and rare works of art that he had collected.

The man died a few months later. There was to be an auction of his rare and priceless paintings. Many influential people from around the world gathered; they were very excited over seeing the great paintings and joyful at having an opportunity to purchase one for their own collection.

On the platform set the painting of the son. The auctioneer pounded his gavel. "We will start the bidding with this picture of the son. Who will bid for this picture?" There was dead silence; you could hear a pin drop on cotton.

Then a voice in the back of the room shouted, "We want to see the famous and priceless paintings.

Skip this one." But the auctioneer persisted. "Will someone bid for this painting? Who will start the bidding? A $200 bid? Perhaps $100 as a starting bid for the son? Another voice shouted angrily. "We didn't come to see this painting. We came to see the Van Goghs, the Rembrandts. Get on with the real bids!"

But the auctioneer continued. "The son! The son! Who'll take the son?" Next Week, the conclusion.

BY TERRI
SCHLICHENMEYER

Once upon a time, Retired Air Force Master Sergeant Thurmond Giles had surely been tall and handsome, even athletic. But there he was, naked and gray-haired, his cocoa skin dry in the Wyoming desert.

Giles made many friends over the course of his long career. But in the new book Astride a Pink

Astride a Pink Horse is amusing but not as colorful as you might expect Horse by Robert Greer, some of them were no friends at all.

Because the man had been found hanging out near an abandoned nuclear missile site – which was clearly posted “No Trespassing” – Air Force officials were keen to know why he was trespassing. Platte County sheriff Art Bosack wanted to know who’d stabbed the man five times and had mutilated his corpse.

The death of Thurmond Giles was just the kind of news that Freddy Dames thrived on. Dames, former baseball-star-turned-millionaire, owned Denver’s Digital Registry News and prided himself on doing whatever it took to get a story, whether it was 100 percent right or not. That included sending his best friend and employee Elgin “Cozy” Co-seia wherever Dames thought the juiciest lead might be found.

And Cozy was okay with that. Actually, he was better than okay with it when he learned that Major Bernadette Cameron would be spearheading the Air Force’s investigation into Giles’ death.

For his part, the recently deceased Thurmond Giles had led an interesting life.

By all accounts, he’d been a terrible womanizer, which was more-or-less why the Air Force had demoted him and banished him to their version of Siberia before discharging him. Giles had left a trail of jilted women and jealous husbands.

Yes, there were a lot of people who had reason to see Giles dead. But was he the only target?

Right in the middle. That’s where I’d place Astride a Pink Horse. It’s a five, dead center, both good-and-bad. It’s okay. If you’re looking for a thrill-a-minute, though, this book bombs.

There’s a great mystery here, but the protagonist is implausibly weird. The characters are likeable enough, but not enough to make me want to see them again. Author Robert Greer created a couple of good corpses, but he didn’t give me much of a reason to care why they became so. There was excitement in this book, but there’s also a stilted, predictable romance that made me roll my eyes.
