Black Leaders Rally For New Orleans Voters

Hundreds of protesters led by the Revs. Jesse Jackson and Al Sharpton rallied Saturday, saying the city's election plans will disenfranchise voters displaced by Hurricane Katrina.

The system of mail-in voting set up for the April 22 election for mayor and other positions in the city will make it difficult for voters living elsewhere to cast a ballot,

Jackson and other activists said. Black people, who made up 70 percent of New Orleans before Katrina hit, form a large majority of those still displaced.

"We want the Voting Rights Act," Jackson said at a news conference before the rally. Black leaders have argued city elections could violate the landmark 1965 law designed to ensure voter equality.

"The ballot is stronger than bullets."- Joseph Schumpeter

Last week in Seattle, King County Superior Court Judge Michael Spearman struck down a Washington state law that prohibits convicted felons from voting until after they have paid all their court-ordered fines and

After doing some research, it didn't take long for all my internal bells and whistles to start blaring in my head. The manner in which our country treats felons that have paid their debt to society is abominable, rife with racial overtones which have their roots in the Civil War.

An estimated 5.3 million people nationwide-more than one third of them black men-are years." currently or permanently ineligible to vote because of a felony conviction, according to the Sentencing Group, Washington, D.C.-based advocacy group.

Think about that for a minute.

5.3 million voters, mostly black, mostly Democrats. Consider that in Ohio, (where George Bush secured re-election by 118,000 votes over John Kerry), 22,000 felons are released from prison each year. In Florida, (where George Bush beat Al Gore by 537 votes-a fact that still boggles my mind), state law prohibited some 600,000. people from voting in 2000.

It is not exactly rocket science to figure out which party is against making it easier for convicted felons to vote. "Our model suggests that the restrictive laws tend to benefit Republicans," said Christopher Uggen, a sociology professor at the University of Minnesota.

Unfortunately, this issue is as ingrained in our culture racially politically. Disenfranchisement of felons is the first five years after the Civil War, primarily in the South. Joseph Hayden, who filed suit against the state of New York over its voter laws, wrote in a San Francisco Chronicle column that in 1896: "Mississippi lawmakers ruled that only a narrow range of offenses-bribery, burglary, theft, arson, perjury, forgery, embezzlement, bigamy and 'obtaining money or goods under false pretenses'-made you lose the vote. Why not murder or rape? Because ex-slaves were far more likely to commit petty property crimes than serious offenses. One delegate to the Virginia convention of 1906, which estabsimilar lished rules Mississippi's, went on record at the time as saying: This plan will eliminate the darkey as a political factor in this state in less than five

At least they were honest and upfront about their motives. The parallels become unsettling to me when I analyze the current prison population: predominantly minority, increasingly non-violent, drug related offenders. The laws prohibiting voting by felons effectively disenfranchise 13% of all black males, a rate seven times the national average. Given current rates of incarceration, three in ten of the next generation of black men will be disenfranchised at some point in their lifetime. In states with the most restrictive voting laws, 40% of African American men are likely to be permanently disenfranchised. Sounds like "the darkey" is still being eliminated as a political fac-

Leaving the issue up to the states has created a nightmarish maze of state laws. Thirty-five states, (including Texas), prohibit felons from voting until they complete parole, with some requiring ex-offenders to apply for the right to vote after a waiting period. Seven states permanently ban felons from voting. If that's not varied enough, Maine and a concept that was invented in Vermont both allow felons to vote while still incarcerated. How can the states decide who votes in federal elections?

"You can move from state to state and your rights can completely change," said Rashad Robinson of the Right to Vote Campaign. "This is more than a states' rights issue; this is about whether or not you can vote for the president."

Just as confusing as the myriad of state laws are the arguments I've heard against giving felons the right to vote after they've served their time. The most ridiculous reason is the one about voting being a privilege and not a right. Not only does this argument not make any sense, its just plain wrong. Or maybe it's the amendments to our constitution that are wrong:

Amendment XV, Section 1: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote..."

Amendment XIX: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote..."

Amendment XXIV, Section 1: The right of citizens of the United States to vote..."

Amendment XXVI, Section 1: The right of citizens of the United States, who are 18 years of age or older, to vote..."

The law in Washington state equates to a modern day poll tax. That's why the ACLU filed suit in 2004. Judge Spearman put it best: "The Washington re-enfranchisement scheme excludes one group of felons from exercising the right to vote, while permitting another, where the sole distinction between them is the ability to pay money bears no rational relation to any stated or apparent governmental purpose," he wrote.

Black people have to make this an issue in local, state and federal elections. Our political capital is directly tied to it. Until we do, our ballots won't be stronger than bullets.

Race, Class And Rape At Duke

My daddy taught me that God has called us to love people and to use things but that we are often tempted to love things and use people. Rape is one of the deepest and most vicious ways that human beings deny their common humanity. Racism is another. These crimes are intertwined deeply in our history, and that history came off its leash once more on Buchanan Boulevard on March 13, as a few Duke students did great harm to our community. The question of whether they also committed rape is one that we must leave to the courts and the police.

But regardless of the fog around that question, other matters remain clear. Young white men of privilege deployed their unearned affluence to hire black women to provide live pornography. This is only partly a free market, where people choose to buy and sell themselves. It is also a slave market, where an enduring racial caste system placed those women in a vulnerable position.

Most of the people involved were college students. One of the women has small children and is trying to put herself through N.C. Central University. Our society has chosen to withhold support from people who seek to improve their lot. Grants and loans have become much harder to obtain at the same time that the gap between rich and poor yawns wider every day. The Duke students took advantage of the woman's position. In doing so, they stepped into a tragic and painful history that still resonates.

White college students a few generations back would sometimes hire a black man to let them tie his hands behind his back, and then the black man would try to fish coins and bills out of a barrel of flour. More recently, white fraternities would don blackface and hold "slave auctions" at parties. Such minstrel humor was very popular but racially degrading, damaging the community and the people involved.

This is also the case with rich white boys hiring black "exotic

The spirit of the lynch mob lived in that house on Buchanan Boulevard, regardless of the truth of the most serious charges. The ghastly spectacle takes its place in a history where African-American men were burned at the stake for "reckless eyeballing" - that is, looking at a white woman - and white men kept black concubines and mistresses and raped black women at will.

It matters, of course, what happened. But the dynamics of race, power and violence that have marred our history remain with us. When the men of one group have most of the power and privilege and see themselves as above the law, that will always be a recipe for abusive relationships with women from other groups, sometimes physically violent, more often spiritually violent.

What baffles me is that young men who have had available to them the finest liberal arts education that money can buy have managed not to learn its highest lessons. I am disappointed in them, to be sure, but I am also disappointed in myself and my colleagues. Surely we are better teachers than that.

But all that is so much whin-

Now we can only reach out in a spirit of healing to the communities that have been hurt. Now we can turn back to our teaching, put aside pedantry and cut to the heart of what education means: understanding that we are all human beings, that we are here to provide illumination and sustenance for each other, and that God and our highest human understandings all call us to better things.

'Something New' An Old Story Line For Black Women

By Dawn Turner Trice

During the weekend, I finally got around to seeing "Something New," a movie that wasn't nominated for an award but piqued my curiosity nonetheless.

"Something New" is a romantic comedy about a successful African-American accountant who's been less than successful in finding Mr. Right African-American Man. So, after much ado, she decides to date a white

Since the movie came out about a month ago, I'd wanted to see it because I couldn't figure out why the interracial dating thing was considered something

Maybe it was something new for the main character. But it definitely isn't anything new for a number of my single girlfriends who are in their 30s and 40s and have known for years they'd have to cotton to the idea of interracial dating if they were going to date

Though they date outside their race, many continue to search for what the movie calls the "IBM," or ideal black man. He's the brother who is well-educated, fairly pleasing to the eyes and gainfully employed (the "BMW," if you will, or black man work-

And, after reading RedEye's engaging story last week that was inspired by the upcoming movie, "Failure to Launch," we also can safely say that he's not the over-30 dude still living at home in his parents' basement.

According to the Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies in Washington, D.C., between 1950 and 2004, the percentage of black women who had never married more than doubled, increasing to 42.4 percent from 20.7 percent. (The percentage of never-married white women increased to 22.7 percent from about 20 percent over that same period.)

The movie's director, screenwriter and producer, all African-American women, have said that the idea for "Something New" came from that alarming 42.4 percent figure.

The reality is that black women, for various reasons, continue to outpace their male counterparts when it comes to education. According to the Joint Center, of African-Americans graduating from college, twothirds are women.

In general, as the black woman's circle has been expanding, the black man's has been contracting and the chances of the two overlapping continue to

Of course, the prospect of these well-educated, successful women ever marrying or having children fades as the years tick by. Despite all the negatives about black men, I see ideal black men all the time. Many of my friends and family members are married to guys who are smart and decent human beings, devoted fathers and husbands.

One last thing and this is a bit of a tangent, but I think quite noteworthy. I've recently seen firsthand that the pool of available black men isn't just small for women in their 20s, 30s and 40s.

Making that love connection naturally gets ultra competitive for the over-70 crowd.

My 73-year-old uncle lost his wife of nearly 50 years last May. He tells me that he's been surprised to learn how helpful the women at his church suddenly have become over the last several months.

The pick-up lines: "I can help you fix dinner sometimes if you like." Or, "I'm available if you need help with your laundry." Or, "I can come over and we can just sit and talk."

My uncle relays this while batting his eyes in the flirtatious way he says the women do. Still a handsome man, he knows he's a rarity since, statistically speaking, he was supposed to precede his wife in death in the same way that many of his would-be suitors have outlived their spouses.

He says that although he's not ready, he guesses they're just looking for another husband.

The women are probably also looking at their daughters and granddaughters and thinking that older women still may have a better chance.

The 2005 Youth Build

house was sponsored by a number of local companies, youth organizations, churches ,and individuals. Corporate sponsors for the Youth Build include Capital One, the Title Sponsor, Estech (ESI) and State Farm Insurance. In addition, funds for the ceiling dry wall were contributed by Jim Meyer in honor of his mother with the tribute: "Thanks to Josephine Vesaturo Meyers, A neat lady."

Is the sky clearest on the day it is most blue?

While you ponder that thought we would like to announce that Minority Opportunity News, Inc., formerly a Dallas based renaissance community tabloid, founded in 1991, has relocated to Plano, Texas and changed our name to MON-The Gazette. In addition to moving our offices to Plano, our editorial coverage has also shifted to encompass Dallas' Northern Corridor. The Northern Corridor is clearly the fastest growing region in Texas, if not in America. MON-The Gazette believes that the engine to continue this growth is the airport expansion in McKinney, which is the largest and most visible of many area opportunities. As always, and true to tradition, MON-The Gazette will be there carving a world of opportunity for those seeking to provide quality services. Should you dare to expand your quest for economic parity outside the southern region or just want to know what is going on up north-

Plano will lose its status as Alcatel SA's North American headquarters after the company's merger with Lucent Technologies Inc.

It's unclear how that change will affect the telecom-equipment maker's 2,350 North Texas employees.

The companies have said they plan to cut about 10 percent of their combined workforce of 88,000. But they have declined to disclose the expected impact of job cuts on specific locations.

The combined companies will base their North American operations at Lucent's headquarters in Morris Hill, N.J., they disclosed in a conference call Monday. But that doesn't mean Plano necessarily faces many layoffs, Alcatel spokesman Charlie Guyer said.

Students Rally For Alleged Duke Rape Victim

Students at North Carolina Central University rallied Monday in support of a classmate who told police last month she was raped by three men at a party hosted by members of Duke University's men's lacrosse team.

The 27-year-old student told Durham police on March 14 that she and another black woman were hired as exotic dancers to entertain a group of five men. When the women arrived at the house, they encountered more than 40 men, all of them white, and were taunted with racist epithets, the woman told police.

According to court documents released Monday, the exotic dancer said that when she and the other woman began their routine, one of the men watching held up a broomstick and threatened to sexually assault them.

After the threat, both women became frightened and left but a man who followed them outside apologized and persuaded them to return. At that point, the woman reported, three men

"While we await the outcome of the investigation, we are taking steps to express our support for the victim and we also are appealing to the NCCU community to be patient and give the legal system an opportunity to bring this to closure," Ammons' statement said.

Duke students said the tension between students and the Durham community is real. Durham, with a population of 210,000, is the home of one of the nation's most prestigious universities but also is a working-class, former tobacco town with a large black population. "There is a disconnect between Duke and the community," said Jeff Richmond, a 21-yearold senior from Beaver, W.Va. "Duke students think of Durham as a dark, scary place."

New Janet Jackson Single Due In May: Calloway Blasts BET Music Videos Album Release Will Follow In September

After several years away from the spotlight, Janet Jackson will return to the spotlight next month with the first single from her as-yetuntitled album.

According to Virgin Urban president Jermaine Dupri, also her boyfriend, the single is expected to arrive at U.S. radio in May, and the album will likely follow at the end of September.

Jackson's new CD will be the first since 2004's "Damita Jo," which dropped in the midst of the fallout surrounding her Super Bowl halftime show. Her longtime production team Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis have con-

Dupri also contributed tracks to the project, but tells Billboard that he won't be a featured guest on any of the songs.

NAACP Starts Push For Younger Members

Katrina Evacuees Wear Out Stay In Houston

Seven months after taking in about 200,000 Louisiana residents left homeless by Hurricane Katrina, Houstonians aren't feeling so hospitable anymore.

Many people in the nation's fourth-largest city complain that the influx has led to more murders and gang violence, long lines at health clinics and bus stops, and fights and greater overcrowding in the schools. Some of those claims are debatable, but "We still feel sorry for them. We still want to help them, but it's to the point where enough is enough," said Torah Whitaker, 25, of Missouri City, a Houston suburb.

Houston received for national acclaim accepting more Katrina evacuees than any other U.S. city. It gave them apartments, houses and health care, and held job fairs for them. Celebrities visited schools and brought gifts for the youngsters.

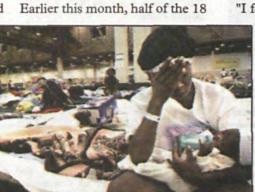

About 150,000 refugees remain in the greater Houston area, which has more than 4 million people. While some evacuees plan to return to Louisiana, thousands have secured their own housing and jobs and plan to make Houston their home.

But a survey last month of 765 Houston-area residents by Rice University sociologist Stephen Klineberg found that three-fourths believed that helping the refugees put a "considerable strain" on the community, and two-thirds blamed evacuees for a surge in violent crime. Half thought Houston would be worse off if evacuees stayed, while one-fourth thought the city would be better off.

The murder rate between the Katrina refugees' arrival in September and last week was up nearly 32 percent from the same period a year ago, Houston Police Chief Harold Hurtt said. He said some of all Katrina evacuees are involved in drug dealing, gangs and violent offenses."

Refugees were involved _ as victims or suspects _ in 35 of the 212 murders in that time period, Hurtt said. In January, Houston police arrested eight members of rival New Orleans gangs in the murders of 11 fellow refugees. Earlier this month, half of the 18 people arrested in an auto theft sweep were evacuees.

Angelo Edwards, a storm victim from New Orleans and vice chairman of the Katrina Survivors Association, said most evacuees are law-abiding citizens trying to find jobs.

"The majority of evacuees are not thugs, looters and hoodlums," Edwards said. "We'd like for the people of Houston to walk in our shoes." If Hurricane Rita had taken a slightly different course, he added, the people of Houston "just as well could have been in our situation."

Some 21,000 students from Louisiana now attend southeastern Texas schools, including roughly 6,000 in Houston. Across the state, Louisiana children scored considerably worse than Texas youngsters on a state exam and thousands could be held back, imposing even higher costs on overburdened districts that are still awaiting federal reimbursement for helping the Tatiana Boone, a Houston 11th-grader, attends one of several schools where brawls have broken out between local teens and Katrina refugees.

"A city that sleeps and a city that don't sleep _ it just does not that is attributable to Katrina mix. It's two different cultures," refugees, but added: "I don't the 17-year-old said, comparing mean to send the message that Houston with the more boisterous New Orleans.

> She complained that the Katrina refugees are getting preferential treatment, even though some of her classmates are even poorer than they are. Storm victims were taken on shopping sprees to buy clothes and were showered with other gifts after they arrived.

"I feel like they shouldn't have to use that as an excuse all the time, as like, 'Oh, I'm an evacuee from New Orleans,' so you get this and you get that," Tatiana said.

Just after the August hurricane, the Harris County Hospital District, the agency that runs the public hospitals and health clinics in Houston and surrounding Harris

County, treated 15,000 evacuees in two weeks at the Astrodome, but now sees about 800 extra patients a month, spokesman Bryan McLeod.

The agency treats 1.2 million patients a year, so apart from the first few weeks, the number of evacuees is "not overwhelming" and is not delaying care for Houston residents, McLeod

Still, treating refugees has cost $11.6 million, and the district has been reimbursed only $1.6 million from the Federal Management Emergency Agency and Medicaid, he said. The district has dipped into reserve funds, he said.

Bus ridership at the Metropolitan Transit Authority was up 12 percent in October through December from the same period a year ago. Spokeswoman Raequel Roberts attributed the increase to evacuees as well as high gas prices.

Mayor Bill White said that most Houston residents are still proud of the city's response and that only a small percentage of refugees are "bad apples."

"Everyone understands when you evacuate a major American city that some of those people will be those who committed a crime or have special needs," he
