Starfish Foundation Forwards Plans For a Fund-raiser

By: Felicia Coleman

Representing 5% of the world's population, the United States consume 75% of the world's cocaine, not including heroin, methamphetamine and other controlled substances. Illegal drugs are a $56 Billion a year business.

Public Relations Director Mel Renfro (also former Dallas Cowboy and Pro Football Hall of Famer) and executive director Belita Nelson of the Starfish Foundation have experienced the pain a family suffers from alcohol and drug addiction. The foundation was founded in 1997 by a group of Plano teachers, parents and students after heroin-related deaths...

Nelson learned that her 21 year old son, Jason, was a drug addict. Nelson said, "In the early spring of Jason's senior year, when I first discovered heroin in my house, I refused to believe that it belonged to Jason. After all, he didn't look like a junkie. I proceeded to envelope myself in denial. Over the next few months, we both struggled with our addictions-Jason with heroin, me with denial. By the end of the summer, I decided that a change of location was necessary so I left Plano East for graduate school. I quickly learned that heroin is everywhere." Jason has been in recovery for three years. Mr. Renfro had a family member who went through heroin addiction and recovery. He also stated that he have seen substance abuse in all sports.

The Starfish Foundation involves goals such as Intervention, treatment, recovery - designed to deal with the crisis at hand and Education and public awareness - designed to be the first step in a para-service agenda in the Denton community for over 30 years. "We were pleased that the M. L. King Center agreed to allocate the space to establish the library and multimedia resource center," stated chapter president, Ada Yovonie. "Our chapter decided to name the space in honor of Ella Goode Johnson because she consistently and unselfishly shares information and resources with others and continues to demonstrate exemplary community service and leadership. We believe this is a fitting legacy that will benefit the Denton community for years to come." When asked what she hoped the media resource center would accomplish,

Johnson replied, "I learned at a young age the value of reading as a source of gaining knowledge as well as for entertainment. I still contin-ue that mindser today. I see the reading and multi-media resource learning center as a repository of information to amuse, enthuse and enlighten the young and the youngat-heart on a myriad of subjects."

Ella Goode Johnson is a University of North Texas graduate and past Zeta Eta and Dallas Alumnae Chapter President. Johnson is also a Golden Life Member and a past national chair of Delta's National Heritage and Archives Committee. She has rendered outstanding service for over 15 years to the Zeta Eta Chapter as a primary advisor and continues as a current advisory council member. She is actively involved in numerous roles of community service in Dallas, including serving as Board Chair of The Black Academy of Arts and Letters, Inc. for over eight

The Changing Face of Religion: The Suburbanization of the Black Church

By Jacqueline Trussell, Founder and President of BlackandChristian.com Chicago, Illinois

The African American church is the institution that traditionally, has provided the black community with a base for spiritual and social growth. As middleclass blacks migrate to communities outside of urban environments, where do they go for spiritual development? How is religion in urban America shifting and changing in light of the "outmigration of nonpoor black families?" (Wilson, 1996: 42) Will urban church memberships experience a decline in response to this movement? How do suburban communities react to black church development in these

Research on this subject has been limited however. The popular media has touched on this developing movement in the black church. In 1997, the now defunct Emerge magazine published an article, "Growing in Glory," which described what is fast becoming a cause for concern for some churches in the central city, the mega-church." Defined as "those [churches] with congregations of at least 3000," the article also notes another important fact.

The move by middle and upper income African Americans to the suburbs and the growth of mega-churches in many of these suburban communities is significant and deserves further study.

Much has been written on the black underclass in inner city America and the social problems in urban communities. However, little attention has been given to where middle class blacks, particularly those living in suburban communities, worship. Middle class blacks, taking advantage of liberal fair housing policies, better schools and less crime move to predominantly white suburbs, leaving behind inner city neighborhoods. Studies showing how this outmigration effects the inner city church do not appear available at this time, however, its is apparent that loss of membership in inner city churches could be examined in the future as a corollary to this situation. The migration experience of blacks moving from city to suburbs, in some ways mirrors the black migration of an earlier period.

Texas Dream Team Bush-Whacked

balloon carrying minority expectations of the dawning of a new day in Texas politics sprung a leak as the initial voting results trickled in and totally collapsed four hours later. The vaunted Dream Team of Sanchez, Kirk and Sharp disappeared in the cloud of dust left by the Bush juggernaut. The GOP Texas massacre was replicated across the country; the likes of which had not been seen in a mid-term election in 70 years. Shell shocked Democrats are scrambling to answer the question, "What happened?"

The answer: the lack of a Democratic message, White flight, and low minority turnout.

Republicans didn't win the election last Tuesday. The clueless Democrats lost it. Texas Democrats like the Republicans were tied to the message of their respective national party. The national Democrats did not have one. Despite the economic burdens that middle and working class families are shouldering, despite the two million jobs lost, despite the scandalous concentration of wealth and income in the hands of the very rich, despite the administration's appalling record on healthcare, the environment and civil rights. Democrats offered no alternative to GOP spin.

A large segment of the population does not like where Bush is leading the country, but this means nothing without an opposition party that can provide leadership. For two years Democratic leadership has been missing in action.

Democrats were out strategized at every turn by the Bush Team that kept war and the fear of a nuclear disaster on the publie mindset. Many Democrats caved in to the Bush position. the timid, vacillating, tiptoeing, spineless leadership felt they could not risk being called unpatriotic. So Democratic wimps like Daschle and Gephardt caved in and voted with the president for war.

If there's one thing voters have shown, it's that they respect leaders who are willing to take risks and stand for a cause, even if questionable. It for Clinton, and it worked for

The election loss definitely wasn't due to a lack of money or candidate qualifications. The Democrats had plenty of both. It had been projected early in the campaign season that the Democratic dream team would galvanize minorities to vote in record numbers. This did not happen. Low Emission Propane Fueled

Austin, Texas - At the urging of Michael L. Williams, Chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission (RRC), the TexasPropane Educational and Marketing Foundation has agreed to help seek an additional $100,000 in funding for board chairman Stanton Bell, Jr. with Bell Hydrogas of San Antonio and Boerne, pledged to help support Chairman Williams' request.

"The goal is to have more safe, clean-burning school buses transporting our school children," Williams said. "We already have an excellent propane bus rebate program in place at the Railroad Commission to do that-we just need to do more."

Texas law provides for a delivery fee on wholesale loads of propane (LP-gas). The fees pay for the Railroad Commission's propane research, education and marketing programs through its Alternative Fuels Research and consumer rebate programs. This year, under grants from the Texas Alternative Fuels Council and the U.S. Department of Energy, the Commission awarded school bus rebates totaling $234,000 to Alvin, Denton and Northside (San Antonio) Independent School Districts. The rebates helped to offset the cost of 61

propane-powered school buses

for these districts.

About 30 Texas school districts operate propane buses. Some of these other districts www.rrc.state.tx.us/commishave applied for rebates, but sioners/williams/williams.html there is not enough money in the Education Division. Half the fee rebate program to meet present revenue each year is used for demand. If all applications were funded, more than 160 clean-burning additional propane buses would be placed in service. Only about 20 percent of pending applications can be approved from remaining grant funds.

> According to a Southwest Research Institute study, propane cuts emissions of toxins and carcinogens by to 96% compared to gasoline. Compared to diesel fuel, propane school buses cut smog-forming oxides of nitrogen (NOx) by two-thirds and virtually eliminate particulate matter (soot) emissions.

In addition to advocating the benefits of cleaner air quality and reducing the exposure our children have to toxic fumes, Williams says that districts are choosing propane fuel because of its cost savings.

Both Alvin and Northside ISDs estimate their annual fuel savings exceed $100,000, and both districts cite additional savings from extended engine life and longer maintenance

The newly arrived migrants found places to live, work and worship. This migration contributed to the economic, social, political, and spiritual life of the city.

One place where the influx of these new migrants was felt was in the black church. Many houses of worship, already struggling, struggled harder to meet the needs of this new population. Some churches, however, did benefit from this influx as membership rolls grew significantly. For example, Olivet Baptist Church in Chicago's historic Bronzeville community, lists 600 members in 1903. By 1921, reports show a membership of 10,012 (Fisher, 1922: 104-5). Chicago's black church community established numerous clubs and in house programs to support the spirirual, social and economic needs of the migrants.

During this period, the black church experienced great growth. The northern urban church became a hub of activity and helped to give meaning and purpose to the new migrants life, much as the church in the south had done from slavery to freedom. Throughout the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s, the church continued to be a voice of hope for a better tomorrow and as a source of protest against America's racial injustice. The black church of the Civil Rights era, was very influential.

A Strong Show of Support for West Coast Black Publishers Association at Annual Conference

LAS VEGAS - Cloves Campbell, Jr., (from left) president of the West Coast Black Publishers Association [WCBPA] and co-publisher of the Arizona Informant newspaper, greets U.S. Senator Margaret Carter, president of the Portland Area National Urban Lague, and Billy Abshaw, manager, media programs for Philip Morris U.S.A., at "Politics, the Press and the Pulpit," the or unization's 19th Annual Business Leadership Conference held recently at Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas. Sen. Carter was the keynote speaker at the gala diffner, a highlight of the event, with a special dessert reception sponsored by Philip Marris Companies Established in 1971, the WCBPA is a trade association of some 22 member newspapers published in 18 markets throughout the western United States.

Northern urban churches, with members rooted in southern rural cities and towns, provided human, but primarily financial resources to the movement.

The Great Society programs of the 1960s also helped the black church. Churches were able to secure funding to operate day care centers, obtain federal funds to build low income and senior citizen housing (often named after the church pastor) and purchase vacant or abandoned property for additional church parking.

The face of black religion began to change. Blacks, who benefited from desegregation in education and housing, experienced employment gains and enjoyed a more favorable economic picture. By the 1980s, middle class blacks in once stable communities in cities like Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland, began to move. Older residents sold their homes and moved into church built senior housing or into suburban communities closer to their adult children who feared for their parent's safety in the old neighborhoods. Once in senior housing and some no longer driving, many had to rely on church transportation systems to travel back and forth to church. Those who located in suburban communities were faced with a dilemma: find a church in their new suburban community or travel back into the central city to attend services at their old church. Thus, the need for suburban African American churches began to increase.

The black church was a critical presence throughout the early migration period of many urban cities. The institution provided a place for African American spiritual and social growth and a training ground for most aspects of black life. However, with the outmigration of middle class blacks to suburban communities, we see a change in church attendance and a possible cause for urban churches to experience declining church memberships and loss of members due to locations in high crime and drug infested communities.

White church movement to suburban communities was a concern of the 1950s and 1960s because it was viewed as an abandonment of its Christian mission to the inner city. (Winter, 1961) In an interesting shift, now, however, inner city neighborhoods are faced with the potential loss of black churches to suburban areas. This presents new challenges to communities already in crisis. When inner city black churches take flight and move to the suburbs, the services, i.e. food pantries, clothes giveaways, day care centers, go with them, leaving residents with few resources to obtain these services

The suburbanization of the black church is part of the changing face of religion being experienced in the black community today.

Other ways of assisting people includes interrupting the cycle of drug and substance abuse by providing an avenue of escape for youth and adults leading to ultimate recovery and to disseminate information to youth and communities regarding the harmful effects of drug and substance abuse.

The foundation is organized and dedicated to making and winning the caustic fight against substance abuse and addiction through: crisis management, community involvement, strategic programs, and aggressive education.

There are four main strategic programs. The first is Detox and Stabilizationintensive residential programs which run 28 to 30 days. The environment is closed and safe focusing on individual and group therapy sessions. Most of these programs feature an emphasis on 12 step involvement as well as family commitment to the health of the family and the recovering individual. Sober Living By the Sea gives the client the opportunity to rebuild their lives as they acquire the tools. It represents learning by doing. This technique allows the individual to build self-esteem and self-confidence.

The fourth is Intensive Outpatient. Intensive out patient programs are designed to treat the individual while allowing them to, at some level, maintain their personal lives. Initially treatment may be from 12 to 18 hours per week. One outstanding example of this type of treatment program is the Matrix Institute which features therapist support, group participation, 12-step involvement, relapse prevention and education, and family involvement in a highly structured pro-

PARKVIEW PLACE PICTURES' "SNAP" SELECTED FOR DEEP ELLUM FILM FESTIVAL

Dallas, TX...

It's official! SNAP is a film festival favorite! Just five months after its local premiere, SNAP has screened at the New Orleans film festival before a sold and crowd and now celebrates being chosen as an official selection of the Deep Ellum Film Festival. One of only 80 submissions accepted to the festival, SNAP is the debut film of Dallas' Jay Gormley and John Venable, cofounders of Parkview Place Pictures.

The 12-minute short is about a man pushed to the edge by a relentless boss and an indignant wife who does the unimaginable when he snaps! "We created a film that twists the age old philosophy... 'that which does not kill us, only makes us stronger.' Instead... 'that which does not kill us, only makes us bitter' drives the main character to the unthinkable," says Gormley.

The film stars local actors Kelley Saunders and Roger Sampson as a very unhappily married couple. Saunders, who plays BECKY CHANDLER, has appeared in more than a dozen feature and independent including Miss Congeniality, The Way She Moves, Serving Sara and 60 Cups of Coffee, which was one of five finalists in the Chrysler Million Dollar Film Festival Competition. Sampson, who plays FRANK CHANDLER, appeared in last summer's hit The Rookie with Dennis Quaid. He was also in Happy Birthday, a Yen Tan film which won Best Film at the Philadelphia Film Festival.

Becky Chandler (Kelley Saunders) complains to her mother about her "loser" husband Frank (Roger Sampson) in "Snap". She's the first of several people to misreat Frank which pushes him to the unthinkable.

Directed, co-written, and porduced by John Patrick Gormley, and co-written by John Venable, "Snap" is a Parkwiew Place Pictures Production

Gormley, who served as director, executive producer and co-writer on the project, is an Emmy-nominated journalist for Dallas' CBS affiliate KTVT. He also took first place honors at the Associated Press Awards for outstanding news coverage of the Texas A & M Bonfire collapse and received the coveted Dallas Press Club award for Excellence in Journalism. Venable, who co-wrote SNAP as well as created the musical score for the film, is an award winning graphic designer having created supercala.com, the only animated movie review site on the web. He is a member of the Dallas-Fort Worth Film Critics Association and has multiple film and television credits including Necessary

Ranger.

Venable says he is thrilled about being part of Dallas' most highly esteemed film festival, "When we found out we had been accepted into the Deep Ellum Film Festival out of over 600 entries, we were especially excited. To be able to showcase our film here at home is a huge honor. It means a lot that all of my friends and colleagues will get to share this experience with us."

Standing in the Shadows of Motown

The Funk Brothers were the little-known backing band that provided music for the Motown record label's hit single from the Detroit era, by artists such as Marvin Gaye and Diana Ross N as the official site claims, "This unheralded group of musicians played on more No. 1 hits than the Beach Boys, the Rolling Stones, Elvis, and The Beatles combined." Standing in the Shadows of Motown tells the band's story through archival footage and still photos, narration, interviews, recreation scenes, 20 Motown master tracks, and 12 new live performances of Motown classics with the Funk Brothers backing up Chaka Kahn, Ben Harper, Bootsy Collins, and others.

123 Years at Mt. Calvary Baptist Church

Recently, Mt. Calvary Baptist Church celebrated 123 years in Farmersville, TX. The church was organized in 1879. The church was called The Colored Baptist Church. In 1912, the first Mt. Calvary Baptist Church was built, and there were about 30 members. By 1963, seven pastors had come and gone, and a new church was built. By 1990, the church had been remodeled, and it gained new members, a van, and portable buildings used for classrooms. The church continues to grow conditioning units.

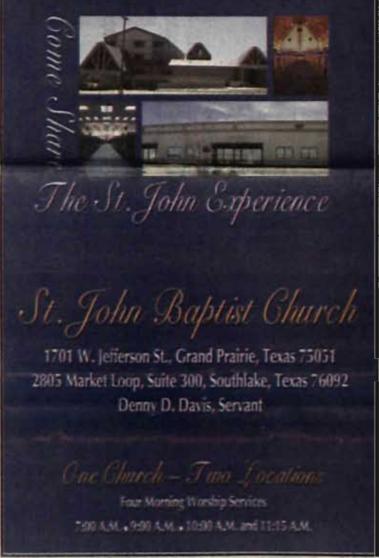

The members of Mt. Calvary are thankful for all the blessings that they received throughout the numerous years. "I can't thank God enough for allowing me to be a part of this history being made at Mt. Calvary..." said Paul Mack, Sr., pastor of Mt. Calvary. Pastor Mack thanked his church family for their support and fellowship. They took time to honor the history of the church by worshipping God and remembering members that passed away. The celebration included singing, devotion, today, with many improvements and a look at the church histoto the church, including new ry. Guest speaker was Rev. carpet installation and new air Roosevelt Griffin, pastor of St. Mark Baptist Church in Garland, TX.
